

About the National Association of Civilian Conservation Corps Alumni (NACCCA)

The NACCCA was established as a non-profit organization in 1977 in the State of California. The NACCCA has over 140 Chapters with members in most states across the nation. For information regarding NACCCA Chapters contact the NACCCA Headquarters. Total membership currently stands at more than 7,200 members. The National Headquarters, CCC Museum and Research Center is located at 16 Hancock Avenue in Jefferson Barracks in St. Louis, Missouri.

A statue of a CCC enrollee stands outside of the NACCCA Headquarters. It is one of four statues erected in different states in the country in memory of the CCC enrollees. More statues are planned for other states.

The NACCCA offers annual national reunions and awards a $1000 scholarship each year to a deserving student. This organization also continues to work to influence others and promote the conservation and work ethics of the CCC. The NACCCA has already influenced federal, state, city, and county authorities across America where CCC-type programs have been developed to help the youth of today work and develop important skills. We continue this important task so millions of young people benefit as former CCC'ers did in the past.

The NACCCA is a private not-for-profit organization that is funded by membership dues and donations. The organization is guided by a board of directors and employs a staff of two full time and one part time positions.

The Membership

Membership in the NACCCA is open to any individual associated with the original CCC and any individual, organization, business, corporation, etc. who wishes to demonstrate their interest and support for preserving the history and accomplishments of the CCC and wish to promote its philosophy.

Annual membership dues to the NACCCA are only $20 per year. Members receive the monthly "Journal" publication, highlighting stories about the CCC and listing important information for our members.
