NEW USES FOR OLD SCHOOLS—On last week's farm page, the Herald-Register began a photo series showing what has happened to area rural schools. Two were shown—one that has been remodeled into a modern home and one that is used as a pig house. One rural school building in the area is still used as a school. It's the former Malcom No. 6 (pictured above), which is now used as Poweshiek county's special education school. Trainable children from throughout the county have attended special classes there the last three years. The series will continue in a later issue of the H-R.
