

JOHN T. FLYNN

COUNTRY
SQUIRE IN THE
WHITE HOUSE

Has the President any fundamental political philosophy?
How much does he know about economics and finance?
Does he believe in universal military service?
Does he want us to go to war, and if so, why?
Is he worried about the national debt, and is he apt to make any effort to balance the budget?
Is he a power-mad would-be dictator, a national savior, or a not too bright country gentleman?

This book by a life long liberal, a columnist for the New Republic, supplies honest answers to these important questions, and to many others which you have been asking yourself about the New Deal.
