^{11/25/42}
Twenty cadets arrived in Boulder City Monday to begin an eight-week training course in flying at the Boulder City airport. They are being housed at the Hualapai lodge on the shore of Lake Mead.

They will receive ground school and primary training as fliers for the United States armed forces, according to Bill Pike, who is in charge of the training course. Classes of 20 will be assigned to Boulder City, and as soon as one group is graduated, another will be sent here from Glendale, California, where they are recruited. These men come from all parts of the nation.
