

Boulderite Dies

ceived here of the death Friday night of J. M. McInerney, pioneer Boulderite who left here about a year and a half ago for the coast because of a heart condition. He died at his home in Huntington Park, Calif., as the result of a heart attack.

The McInernys came to Boulder City in early construction days on the dam and were prominently identified with the development of the community and with St. Andrew's Catholic church. McInerney leaves his widow and an adopted son, Buddy.

A long-time Bureau of Reclamation employe, he was on the maintenance staff at the dam just before the family left here.