

Vegan Is Nearly Electrocuted on Job

William Garner, chief floor polisher on the Boulder dam project, narrowly escaped death by electrocution yesterday, when while operating his machine he came in contact with a steel door, establishing a short circuit for the current through his body.

Garner was unable to loosen his grip and it was only when a fellow worker pulled the plug, shutting off the current, that he collapsed to the floor.