

Home Town Boy Makes Good, Returns and Finds Home Town Made Good

Right smack-dab in the middle of the dance floor at the Boulder City U. S. O. is the spot where Corp. Raymond Dill used to sleep.

But it was while he was in the C.C.C., in about 1937 and 1938, and the building was arranged differently in those days, Dill revealed yesterday during a visit to his old stamping grounds here.

But Boulder City has changed a great deal in general, he said.

"It's remarkable the way Boulder City has beautified herself grown up," Corporal Dill said.

Dill helped build the Boulder City airport and remodel the former hospital to become the National Park Service building, be
