

NOTE TO THE READER

Since this book is about a person whose pet name took on special meaning to those who knew her, the author feels that unless the reader understands and pronounces this name properly, he will fail to realize the significance of the individualism that was hers.

Mam-ma, as she was known by her family and close friends, is pronounced with the following diacritical markings: Mam'-mä.