

No wonder Sandra Ragland looks like she's been under a strain. After finally being convinced that she couldn't revolutionize life on earth through her poetry or otherwise, she has turned to teaching philosophy to the Robots on Mars. Well, Gertrude Sharp has at last found a way to create synthetic stallactites. She has cordially invited all to visit "Gertie's Home-Made Cave" and tour it while listening to the soothing strains of Johnny Warner and his Sewanee Mountaineers. Poor Martha Grizzard, when refused a position with the Metropolitan Opera Co., decided to escape life and is now running "Grizzy's Rest Home for Weak and Weary Old Maids." Why, there's Jane Blackwelder, who, out of the goodness of her heart, has consented to be head comic strip artist of that krazy newspaper, The Nashville Record. Jane Lee, also with The Record, has gained county wide acclaim for her gossip column entitled "The Tattler". It looks like she has a copy with her, and, as usual, we are extremely anxious to read all of the newest reports on our old classmates.

It is shocking to learn that Judy Pond left Alan waiting at the altar, and on a last minute decision (not her own) eloped with Edwin. And poor unsuspecting Claude was heartbroken to find that it was Eve Loser and not Joan that he had taken on his honeymoon. Little did he suspect that Joan had eloped to the mysterious wilds of South Africa with Tarzan. Bebe and Al finally got married and are now recognized as being among the 86 top scientists in the nation after having isolated (you guessed it) the meson! Ginger Moorehead "De-Witt" hasn't changed at all. There she is running up to one of the girls exclaim-
