

ambassador to Istanbul (not Constantinople) and feels perfectly at home there with all the "Turkeys".

Well, from the window here in our house, it looks like the party's about ready to break up. But no more of this; it's getting late and we must draw the curtains and turn out the lights in our house. We must admit that it has been fun to look into the future and see the success of the class of '54: