PASSOVER MESSAGE

Passover, history's first revolt against human bondage, never seemed more vivid to me than it does today.

It was four thousand years ago that Moses, intrepid spokesman of God, made it clear to the ruler of Egypt that to oppress human beings is to blaspheme against God. That lesson led to the first Passover.

Looking upon the world scene in perspective, it would seem that one nation has been cast in the role of a potential Moses. That is our beloved United States of America. In assuming his role of liberator, Moses risked much but found the greatest gratification possible to a human being. So the United States can bring untold benefit to its own spiritual status if it will seek to bring aid and assistance to the millions of underprivileged people of the world.

To do so will be more than playing the part of a good will ambassador. To do so will insure us the friendship of many nations and assure the advent of global peace.

This our great nation can achieve if it will once and for all recognize the fact that gifts to nations of the world should be made without calling for any political commitments whatsoever. The whole values of democracy will then easily outshine the evils of communism.

Let us always remember that redemption from Egyptian slavery required courage, sacrifice and the outlay of energy on the part of Moses and his followers. It did not come automatically. Similarly today, freedom will come only if men and women everywhere put to the highest use the impulse for liberty implanted within them by Almighty God.

I rejoice that in a few days I will be again treading the holy soil of Israel, objective of the Biblical slaves and scene of a glorious modern chapter in human self-redemption. It will be my privilege to convey to the people of Israel, "little America of the Middle East," the good wishes of the people of my country for continued welfare and progress in the realization of the ideals given to

Judaism Is Hope

Judaism is a religion that persists in its hope for mankind regardless of conditions. Our religion has faith in the human being to perfect himself, to eventually create upon this earth a kingdom of God.

It is truly amazing how our forerunners, who passed through the most horrible ordeals, who suffered mercilessly at the hands of cruel taskmasters from Pharaoh to Hitler nonetheless continued to sing their song of hope for man, and to dream their dreams for the coming of a better day. Logically we should be a very cynical, embittered religion of despair. Logically, we should have long ago concluded that man is a vicious animal, an educated hoodlum, a soft-spoken barbarian. For what has been our historic experience? We have endured heavy blows and have known the pain of hatred, expulsion and destruction. Illogically, however, we keep on hoping and believing and maintaining our faith in the coming of a better world through a better human being. It is this unquenchable hope which runs all through Jewish prayers and Jewish beliefs. It is this remarkable affirmation of the essential goodness of man, blessed by a loving Father in Heaven, that enabled us to go through the tortures of the centuries and emerge innocent and incorruptible, with trust in the future.—Rabbi Hyman J. Schachtel Congregation Beth Israel, Houston, Texas.
