

The Monitor is running a special section to mark the one-year anniversary of the 9/11 attacks. As part of that commemoration, we'd like readers to share their memories of where they were when they heard about the attacks.

Include your reaction, that of those around you in vivid detail; capture the dialogue.

It was one day in second period when I found out about the attacks that were going on. Some teacher walked in my class telling us about it. I still didn't really know what was going on at the time.

Almost everyone was freaked out. There was even a few students and teachers that were panicing or something. After a while, a few people started explaining it to me. Then after another while, I started realizing that it was something huge.

Now it's being considered history and ~~theyre~~ they're actually thinking about making it some sort of holiday or something.
