POEM—THANKSGIVING

Oh, Thanksgiving days of yore.
Tables were spread with delicious fruits
And such and such, the most capricious appetite suit
As young and old tried the good things to hoard.
Happy were the faces around that board.
There were many in the group so fine
But now all is changed by old Father Time.
These faces are serious and now assume care
As they launch in the world to do their great share.
Grandparents, dear, have now gone away
Whom with Theodore and Helen we'll forget not a day.
God grant as they lived, may we live evermore
And meet with them on that beautiful shore.

Are you thankful? If so, get a school tablet and write it full of your blessings. You have not, as was David, been driven from cave to cave by an angry king and yet he wrote the 23rd and 103rd psalms which your Grandmother Elizabeth Stanton Lambert requested in her will that you commit. Better get it, there are ten gold mines in it.
