

Hand rakes are used to harvest the cranberries

Lincoln county cranberries produced by the Copper River Development Co. are sold throughout the United States under the trade name of "Indian Trail."

This venture, started in 1945, has expanded to a point where the annual production is approximately 3,000 barrels from 32 acres. An additional eight acres were planted last spring and 15 more will be planted this year to bring the total to 55 acres. The bogs are located in the Town of Corning.

Following the harvest, the berries are graded and packages are filled and sealed. The sorting machinery and other equipment is of the most modern design. This enterprise gives full and part time employment to a large number of persons.

These berries are on their way to market

Boxes of berries from the marsh ready to go to the sorting machine