

A NEW VERSION of America's smallest attack bomber flew for the first time today. The Douglas A4D-5 "Mighty Midget", capable of carrying nuclear bombs, rockets, guided missiles, machine guns and other weapons, made its maiden flight at Edwards Air Force Base in California. Less than half the size of many current jet fighters, the Navy's bantam bomber is so small it was designed without the folding wings previously required for carrier-based planes.