

THE 'SWEETEST' SPOT IN STATE

Undisputed Title Goes to Northwestern Ohio

SUGAR BEET GROWS IN FAVOR

Annual Crop Would Fill Train Miles Long—Extensive Plans Under Way to Handle Crops—Seed Hard to Get—Prices Up.

Northwestern Ohio—the sweetest spot in the Buckeye state! This is not merely an idle boast, but an undisputed fact which stands out prominently because of the extensiveness of the sugar beet industry.

This section of the state will have about 61,500 acres planted in sugar beets this year, compared to 39,000 the previous year, which will produce enough carloads to make a train 50 miles long.

Over in Paulding county, where the Continental Sugar company has a million dollar sugar refining plant, the largest in northwest Ohio, 30,000 acres have been planted in beets this year. The acreage is not all confined to Paulding county, but includes much surrounding territory.

Last year the acreage of the Continental Sugar company was below standard, but 18,000 acres being under cultivation, whereas 20,000 acres is the normal amount.

The Toledo Sugar company, ranking second in size in this section of Ohio, will have 14,000 acres this year. Last year it had 9,000 acres.

The acreage in Ottawa county, where the Ohio Sugar company operates, is 7,500 this year, compared to 7,500 last season.

A new beet plant which is to be located just east of the city limits of Defiance, will be larger than any yet constructed in Ohio. It will be a $2,500,000 institution.

It is estimated it will require two years before the big factory and its machinery is installed and ready for operation.

In the meantime farmers in that locality, many of whom are already large producers of sugar beets, are planning on increasing their acreage to furnish the beets which will be required by the local plant when it is ready for business.

While refiners are making extensive plans for this year's big season, they state, however, that the beet increase will not have very much influence on the price of sugar, as the beet sugar production is only 22 per cent of all the sugar used in the United States and consumption is increasing more rapidly than the increased acreage of sugar beets.

Sugar beet seed comes a long way—all the way from Russia, and some from Holland. In the former country it is raised by German farmers. The Russian seed has been secured with much difficulty because of the unsettled condition of Europe the last five years, and was routed to the United States by way of Holland, which is a great sugar beet country. The Continental Sugar company is selling this seed to farmers for 25 cents a pound, although it costs the company 35 cents.

The farmers will continue to get the contract price for beets based on the market price of sugar when the beets are harvested. This means that the farmers will receive $9 a ton for beets when 8 cent sugar is quoted. For every cent that sugar goes over the 8 cent price, the farmers will receive $1 more a ton for their beets.

Twenty cent sugar will bring the farmers $21 a ton for their beets. With the prevailing high price of sugar and the knowledge that they will be paid for their beets according to the market price of sugar, which will probably continue to sell at a fancy figure for some years, farmers in northwestern Ohio readily acceded to the request of the refiners located in their territory to plant more beets, notwithstanding labor is much higher than heretofore.

WEEKLY CROP REPORT

Conditions for Ohio Section for Week Ending July 6—Weather favorable to General Crops.

Near normal temperatures, moderate to heavy rains and ample sunshine combined to make weather conditions favorable for the rapid growth of meadows, pastures, gardens and crops generally and for field work except that it was too wet in some sections and having was somewhat delayed by the showery weather of the first part of the week. The progress and condition of corn were satisfactory to very good and most corn fields are now clean and well cultivated. Winter wheat made satisfactory development and is now ripening in all sections of the state. Harvesting is fairly general in southern and has begun in central sections. Some fruits, especially late apples, continue to drop readily in some localities but as a whole the fruit crops are good to excellent. Gardens are fine.

HOW TO KILL WHEAT PESTS

Warning to Farmers of Chinch Bug Influx

Free Bulletins on Request—Russian Apple Favored for Ohio—Beet Sugar Hard to Make—Join to Save Shade Trees.

"Watch for chinch bugs." So states the department of entomology at the Ohio Experiment station at Wooster in answering queries concerning insects that are liable to do crop damage during the coming harvest.

Chinch bugs have already been found in abundance in the northwestern section of Ohio, but no evidence of damage is generally noticed until the wheat crop is removed and the bugs begin to migrate into the corn and oats fields.

The wheat insect survey of last year showed a heavy infestation of chinch bugs in western and northwestern Ohio. The 1920 survey, which is now in progress, will make it possible to determine how badly the Ohio wheat fields are infested at present.

Chinch bugs develop quickly during dry weather and do their greatest damage in a period of drought. Wet weather retards their action and often prevents a heavy outbreak.

A bulletin has been prepared showing methods of constructing dust and tar barriers in farm fields. This will be mailed free to any student of Ohio upon request to the Ohio experiment station, Wooster.

Russian Apple Favored. The Yellow Transparent apple has been found to be one of the most successful early apples for Ohio culture at the station.

The first fruits often appear the second or third year after setting the trees. The crops then gradually increase and under good conditions nearly annual crops are produced.

It is generally necessary to thin the apple trees in this variety over production tends to develop a biennial bearing habit of this apple.

The variety was imported from St. Petersburg, Russia, by the United States department of agriculture in 1870. The yellow transparent was one of the most desirable of 350 European or Russian apples introduced at that time.

Beet Sugar Hard to Make. The complicated process necessary to secure syrup or sugar from sugar beets makes it impossible to produce a homemade product from sugar beets grown on farms, according to chemists at the Ohio station.

It is possible to produce a good quality of syrup from sorghum or sugar cane—a mill being required to grind the sorghum and evaporating equipment for boiling the juice.

Sugar is produced from sugar beets by slicing the beets and dissolving the soluble substance with hot water. This dark colored liquid is then treated with lime and carbon dioxide gas until a thick syrup containing about 50 per cent of sugar is secured. This is then further concentrated by evaporating in vacuum pans.

Syrup made by boiling down the juice obtained by soaking sliced, washed beets in a large quantity of water is a sugar of inferior quality and odor as compared with that of the sorghum syrup.

Join to Save Trees. That community co-operation should be employed to protect shade trees is pointed out by the department of forestry at the experiment station.

The community effort in this line is generally responsible for the adoption of mechanical protectors and securing and court action whenever necessary to save trees from injury or destruction.

The tree faker is responsible for injuries to shade trees in a number of localities, but good tree surgery and repair in the hands of an expert are effective in preserving the trees in many city or suburban localities.

It is shown that many shade trees are lost annually from remodeling and grading streets. Public service wires and gas mains also cause injury and damage.

A bulletin on "Protection for Shade Trees" is mailed free to residents of Ohio on application to the Ohio experiment station, Wooster, O.
