

Four Seasons of great golf

A sweater is sometimes needed for comfort outdoors during the Winter, but a light one is usually adequate.

Take 27 lush fairways, 27 manicured greens and nine dozen fluffy traps . . . skillfully blended into three challenging nines in a lovely setting, and you have the reason golfers return to Point Clear again and again. The courses were designed by two noted golf architects, Joseph L. Lee and the late Perry Maxwell. Privacy is an important feature of all three nines: most of the fairways are corridors walled in by tall pines and massive oaks. You play relaxed, undistracted. Tee times are not necessary.
