Cranberries the delight of the season

Cranberry, the "bounce" berry of the early American colonists, is a true American berry found only in North America. It was introduced to the first settler by the Native Americans, who pounded and mixed the fruit with buffalo or deer meat in order to produce pemmican, a greasy but nutritious dietary staple of food. The berries were also mashed and used as a dye for clothing and rugs as well as a poultice for wounds. The cranberry was a versatile fruit to the Indians.

OVER THE BACK FENCE

By Dorothy Nell

The lingonberry, a close relative, is found abundantly in northern Europe where lingonberry preserves and jellies are specialties in Norway, Denmark and Sweden.

Our first introduction to the cranberry came as a child when everyone strung cranberries to hang on the Christmas tree as garlands, along with popcorn. Many years later the cranberry is used to produce unusual desserts and entrees, especially used in conjunction with such fruits as strawberries, apples and rhubarb. One memorable year we candied the little "bounce berries," a long, tedious process, but rewarding.

They are said to have been called "bounce berries" through a legend that a lame man who was a cranberry grower stored his ruby-colored fruits in an upstairs loft and used to let them roll downstairs and into his kitchen. The best berries bounced, and the inferior ones "just lay there." Thus the cooks could know which berries to use to adorn their holiday tables.

CRANBERRY CAKE

- 1 package lemon cake mix
- 3 ounces cream cheese, softened
- 3/4 cup milk
- 4 eggs
- 1-1/4 cup ground cranberries
- 1/2 cup chopped walnuts
- 1/2 cup ground walnuts
- 1/4 cup sugar
- 1 tsp. mace (optional)

Blend cake mix, cream cheese and milk, beat for two minutes at medium speed. Add eggs, blend and beat two more minutes. Combine cranberries, walnuts, sugar and mace and fold into cake batter. Pour into well-greased and floured tube or 10-inch bundt pan. Bake at 350 degrees for one hour or until toothpick comes out clean. Cool for five minutes. Remove from pan and dust with powdered sugar.

... And I want a train set

Sally McCray of Oak Harbor tells Santa what she wants for Christmas, while her 6-year-old granddaughter, Jorden, waits her turn. Santa made an appearance at the Oak Harbor K mart late November, but has been seen in many other places on the island — even riding the Clinton-Mukilteo ferry.

Safety as important as holiday cheer

Tips for children's safety suggested

The last thing we may think about during the festive holiday season is that some gifts we buy, some decorations we use, or some foods we put out for family and guests could result in accidents and potentially serious injuries to children.

As a reminder that holiday hazards do exist, Children's Hospital and Medical Center in Seattle, the Seattle Poison Center and the Washington chapter of the American Academy of Pediatrics offer the following safety precautions. The list is by no means comprehensive.

CHRISTMAS TREE SAFETY: Trees should be placed on a solid base and ideally kept out of reach of small children. For example, place a small tree atop a table, or if you buy a full-size tree, put it in a corner. If possible, fence the tree off by using an unfolding-style portable crib. Use only non-toxic tree preservatives. Keep children away from electrical cords and outlets. Turn off tree lights when you're not home or not using the room, to avoid a potential fire hazard. Packages wrapped with ribbons are a choking hazard and should be kept out of reach of small children who can put ribbons in their mouths. Dry trees are a fire hazard, so keep them in water and dispose of the tree when the needles start to fall off in large quantities.

ORNAMENTS: Bubble light fluids and colored fireplace crystals can be toxic. Angel hair, made of spun glass, can scratch the eyes and irritate the skin and gastrointestinal tract. Keep this and small Christmas tree ornaments — which pose a choking hazard — away from a child's grasp by hanging ornaments high in the tree.

HOLIDAY PLANTS: Holly, mistletoe and Jerusalem cherry can be poisonous and should be kept out of reach of children. Poinsettias are not toxic but should be kept out of reach, too.

FOOD: Keep infants and toddlers away from hard candy, nuts, popcorn and other treats which pose a choking hazard.

ALCOHOL: Gifts which contain alcohol, such as colognes, aftershaves and liquor, can be dangerous to children if swallowed. Don't put them under the tree where they can be reached by children.

Alcoholic beverages are a hazard to adolescents and adults, as well. Consider serving non-alcoholic drinks at parties, and above all, don't drink and drive or mix drugs with alcohol.

IF A POISONING OCCURS, or if you suspect your child has ingested something he shouldn't, call your regional poison center immediately:

—Seattle Poison Center, 206-526-2121 or 800-732-6985.

—Mary Bridge Poison Center, Tacoma, 206-594-1414 or 800-542-6319.

TOY SAFETY: No matter what kind of toys you buy for any age child, safety comes first — always. Here are resources for toy safety information:

—In the Seattle area, call Children's Resource Line at Children's Hospital, 206-526-2500, 7 a.m. to 11 p.m. daily. The line is staffed by pediatric nurses.

—"Child's Play, a Guide to Play and Toys," produced by Children's Hospital, is available free of charge in all Puget Sound-area Pay 'n Save drugstores. It covers toy safety as well as toy selection and play activities for children birth to 12 years.

—The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission handles complaints on unsafe products and publishes "Which Toy for Which Child: A Consumer's Guide for Selecting Suitable Toys." Call 800-638-2772 or write CPSC, 5401 Westbard Ave., Bethesda, Md. 20207.

According to the CPSC, 34 children died in toy-related accidents between January 1988 and September 1989, and the agency estimates there were 142,000 toy-related injuries in 1988. Children under five were the largest group with injuries.

In general, watch for these toy dangers: sharp edges and points; small parts which could be swallowed or pose a choking hazard for young children; cords or strings (don't use with crib toys); propelled objects (make sure children are old enough to use and are aware of dangers); electric toys (should bear the label "UL Approved"); small toys that young children can grab and swallow; and toys that are inappropriate for age (use age guidelines on toy packages).

Toys which pose specific hazards include marbles and small balls (choking); toy boxes or chests which lack lid supports; plush animals with parts that come off easily (choking hazard); toys with electric heating elements, which are not recommended for children under eight years of age; and projectile toys such as arrows or darts which don't have protective tips.

Many children receive bicycles for Christmas, and they should come with a bicycle helmet as well. Bicycles are not toys and can lead to accidents with serious, if not fatal, consequences. Helmets reduce head injuries by 85 percent.

Remember, nothing can substitute for adult supervision when it comes to safety.

Fire department urges caution

Bill Sharp, Oak Harbor Fire Department's fire safety officer, offers these tips for the holiday.

Safety should always be considered when choosing and decorating a tree. And in some cases, special permits are required.

■ Artificial trees and tree lights must be "UL" listed.

■ All trees should be made flame retardant with approved flame-retardant material or be constructed of inherently flame-retardant materials.

■ Trees six feet or more in height are required to have a permit issued by the fire department. Before the tree is purchased, the fire department should be called for an appointment.

■ Schools should not place any tree earlier than one week prior to Christmas vacation, and should remove all trees the day before vacation starts.

■ Support and place the tree properly in water. Never place near sources of heat or in an exit. The tree, standing or falling, should not block an exit or exit pathway in the event of a fire.

In natural trees the most important factor for safety is freshness. The higher the moisture content, the less likely the tree is to dry out and become a serious fire hazard.

Stand the tree outdoors in water until you are ready to move the tree indoors. Bring the tree in just prior to Christmas and remove as soon afterward as possible. If you hand squeeze the tree branch and there is a large loss of needles, the tree is dangerously dry and should be removed.

Safety over Christmas should also be considered while hanging lights.

Check the indoor tree lights and outdoor lights each year before using. Look for frayed or bare wiring and cracked sockets. Any set that is damaged should be thrown out or repaired.

All lights should be fastened to the tree securely, and the light bulbs should not come in contact with branches or needles. Curtains and other flammable materials should be kept away from light bulbs at all times.

Do not overload extension cord by connecting more than three sets of lights on one extension cord, and see that electrical connection joints are kept away from the water supply of the tree. Make certain that all tree lights are turned off when the tree is unattended and when the building is secured for the evening.

Decorations must be constructed of inherently fire-retardant materials or treated with an approved fire-retardant material.

Christmas tree boughs are highly flammable and cannot be used for decorating.

Exit doors, exit lights, fire alarm sending devices and fire extinguishers cannot be concealed or obstructed by any decorative material.

The use of candles requires special consideration and a permit issued by the fire department.

Is a $50 house payment too much?

Hey, have you seen the unique calendar that Koetje Agency is dispensing? We had business with them so we appropriated one for next year.

Did you know that from 1908 to 1937 you could order a house from Sears Roebuck? Everything needed including the last doorknob.

The calendar says that if you had a building site and $650 you could order a new home, and over 100,000 people did just that.

So precise were the plans that the pieces went via rail so that each shipment arrived exactly at the right time in the construction schedule (provided it didn't rain forever.)

Perhaps the creme de la creme of the structures was the "Magnolia." It came with columns, balconies, 10 rooms, grand staircase and servant's quarters. Rich folks who had $5,140 could also buy a matching outhouse for $39. The item fails to mention if it was one seat or two.

As a precaution, instructions came in a leather folder with the owner's name embossed in gold. And the admonition "Do not take anyone's advice as to how the building should be erected." They had trouble with sidewalk superintendents even then.

To keep a finger in the pie, Sears carried mortgages on the materials and labor. The monthly payment on a palatial $6,000 house was about $50, a princely sum in those days. Then came the Depression and the end of an era.

SOMETHING ELSE AGAIN

By Alice Elles

Some of the house styles look very familiar, and I would guess that several were erected in the Skagit Valley area, around Conway in particular.

This singular calendar is a keepsake, worthy of filing to look at again after the year is up. Especially nostalgic for one age group.

One such lady called recently and I related my troubles with a minor flood. The deep sink in the garage overflowed. So what, you say, a cement floor is easy to mop up. Sure it is. If it doesn't have a disassembled car engine and car body on most of it. And little puddles of grease, oil and antifreeze that were accidentally spilled and covered with paper and kitty litter.

If the floor is absolutely level, you can sweep it out. As it was, a mop was too slow. I did the job on hands and knees in cold water with a huge sponge that the late man of the house had bought so I could wash the car more easily.

So it was soak and squeeze, soak and squeeze until my wrists hurt. Not to mention my butt when I slipped and fell. Or my temper when I slipped again and fell with one arm in the bucket of cold black water which spilled out again. I think I know how to speak in tongues, as it wasn't the King's English that sent the cats scurrying for the rafters.

I was handicapped in that I didn't dare move any tools or the jack handle under the wheel. But I prevailed and soon it was damp but not a swimming pool and me with no water wings.

A friend called just after that and commiserated, but there was a sort of chuckle in her tsk, tsk. She topped my tale with hers.

When she and her husband bought their first home (less than $4,000), they had an oblong iron kitchen sink. The drain was clogged, so her hero borrowed his Dad's tools and took apart the trap. Such a mess and such an odor. They caught the debris in a big basin.

They cleaned out the trap and then her husband picked up the basin and automatically emptied it into the sink open trap. Such a mess and such an odor. So they mopped again, all the while wifey was giving husband what-for.

When she paused, he said, "Well, what should I have done with it?"

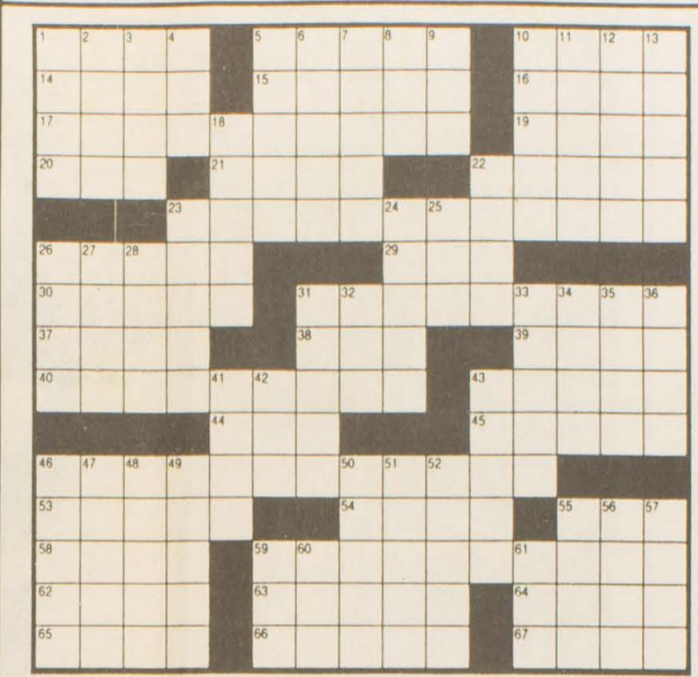

She replied, "You could have done this," and she grabbed the basin and did the same thing. Emptied it into the sink.

There was nothing left to do but sit on the floor and laugh amid such a mess and such an odor.

5.2 million snuffed habit

Nearly 50 million smokers put their cigarettes aside Nov. 16 to take part in the American Cancer Society's Great American Smokeout, according to a survey released by the Gallup organization this week.

According to the nationwide telephone survey of 1,201 men and women aged 18 and over, the Gallup organization estimates that:

- 35.9 percent of the nation's 50 million smokers participated in the Smokeout. The total number is 17.9 million.
- 10.5 percent of the nation's smokers were able to stay off cigarettes for 24 hours, totalling 5.2 million.
- 3.9 million were still not smoking one to three days later.
- Of those surveyed, 85 percent had heard of the Smokeout.

"Once again we are very pleased that more than one-third of the nation's hard-core smokers (nearly 18 million) participated in this year's Great American Smokeout," said Robert J. Schweitzer, M.D., national president of the American Cancer Society.

'Chinamen's hats' formation fascinating

By JOAN NIENHUIS
Today writer

Growing up in San de Fuca, I used to ride my bicycle to West Beach on blustery winter days. The Pacific storms would deposit treasures on the sand not found during the mild summer months.

I accumulated a vast collection of the small shells we called "Chinamen's Hats." They are from limpets, mollusks with shells of a distinctive conical shape.

These animals are still tiny when they begin to form their shells. The shell material, conchiolin, is formed within their bodies by complex organs which extract calcium and other minerals from their food.

Conchiolin is a semi-liquid which hardens rapidly when exposed to air or water. It is secreted and released by the delicate sac of tissue which covers the internal organs, the mantle, and the mantle's edge.

The shape of the shell depends upon the shape of the mantle edge which made it. Ridged shells are made by species having mantles with frilled or ruffled edges.

Similar to plywood construction, the mollusk shells are three-ply,

CLOSE ENCOUNTERS

From the Whidbey Audubon Society

There is an outer epidermal layer, a middle layer and a lining. All the layers are made of calcium carbonate. The middle layer has horizontal crystals which appear dull and rough. The crystals of the inner layer are vertical, forming a satin-smooth finish.

This winter, you may be able to identify the Fenestrate Limpet. It is gray-green at its off-center apex. A checkerboard color pattern appears near the margin.

The Fingered Limpet is strongly ribbed and has a wavy outline. It is usually brown with finger-like patches of white streaming down from the top.

The Speckled Limpet has many fine dots at the top. Large white spots form a butterfly pattern on a band of brown at the base of the shell.

Other abundant limpets in our area include the Mask Limpet, with its fine white speckles; the Pacific Plate Limpet, with small riblets and irregular radial stripes; and the Unstable Limpet, having an oblong shell formed because of its attachment to the stems of kelp.

Cooler weather slows the shell growth. Hence, our mollusks have thinner shells than those in tropical areas. In times of retarded growth, the shell material secreted builds up into a false lip. In some areas, the age of the animal can be determined by the number of false lips.

Limpets love flat, exposed surfaces in tidal areas. As soon as they settle, each one attaches with a suction disc. They rub to and fro, wearing the rock and the edge of the shell. In time, the groove and shell combine to form an excellent defense.

When submerged, the limpets forage to find food. They always manage to find their way home, even when scientists have tried to fool them with false grooves in the rocks.

If you find a limpet attached to a rock, save your strength. Once adhered, it may take a force of 70 to 80 pounds to remove it.

Shaping up kitchen vital to healthy cooking

Many of us are already thinking about the holidays. We want to get the house ready for the friends and family members who will be visiting. One area of great concern to the cook, of course, will be the kitchen. Will it pass Aunt Tilly's white glove inspection? If not, these guidelines will get your kitchen in tip-top shape for the holidays.

Start with the freezer. Is it frozen over or jam-packed with food? If so it will not hold frozen meat and poultry at safe freezer temperatures — 0 degrees Fahrenheit or below. If the freezer is frozen over, you may need to defrost it. Examine frozen items carefully; discard foods that have changed in appearance or texture. Put usable foods in an ice chest filled with ice.

When returning food to the freezer, date the packages and divide them into long and short storage categories so you can use them within the recommended storage time. Also, as you stock the freezer, save space for the large bird, roast or ham that will be served for the holiday dinner.

Next, the refrigerator. If you have leftover meat and poultry dishes, use them as soon as possible. These foods can be stored in the refrigerator from three to four days.

Fresh meat or poultry should be used within one to three days. Also, check the "sell-by" or "use-by" date on mayonnaise, salad dressing or other foods that need refrigeration. Throw away outdated, moldy and obviously spoiled foods.

To get rid of the odor that may linger from spoiled food, wash the refrigerator with baking soda and water, and put a box of baking soda in it to absorb odors.

To safely store food in the freshly cleaned refrigerator:

■ Make sure the refrigerator is set at 40 degrees or below to prevent most bacterial growth; use a refrigerator thermometer to check the temperature.

■ Don't overload the refrigerator. Cold air must be able to circulate to keep foods at optimal temperatures; and

■ Tightly cover all foods and use them within the recommended storage time.

Cabinets can be a hideaway for food safety pitfalls. What could be more devastating than finding out while preparing the holiday meal that the canned ham you put in the cabinet two months ago should have been refrigerated? Before storing foods in the cabinet, read the labels. Since today's packaging for some shelf-stable and refrigerated products are so similar, label reading is necessary to ensure such foods are stored properly. If you find a product on the shelf that should have been refrigerated, throw it out.

Countertops, sinks, and utensils need extra care. To keep bacteria from spreading from raw to cooked foods, wash the countertop, sink and utensils after they have been used to prepare raw meat and poultry. Use hot soapy water, or better yet a solution of one tablespoon (about a capful) of chlorine laundry bleach to one gallon of cool water.

Carefully scrub and clean wooden cutting boards since bacteria can harbor in the grooves left by knives. A hard non-porous cutting board is better for preventing the spread of bacteria. Also, wash kitchen linen often and throw away old sponges.

Kitchen appliances should work properly. Use an oven thermometer to check the temperature in your conventional oven. If it isn't working properly, have it serviced immediately. With a well-serviced oven and by using a meat thermometer, you can make sure meat and poultry cook to proper internal temperatures. Poultry is thoroughly cooked at 180 to 185 degrees; beef and other meats should reach 160 degrees.

Check the microwave oven, too. Stale food particles left in the microwave oven absorb some of the microwaves. This could cause cooking time to be slower than usual.

To clean the microwave oven, place a mixture of lemon juice and water inside the oven and turn it on. The steam will condense on the oven surface and make food much easier to remove. The lemon juice will absorb odors.

Before preparing those holiday foods, make sure your kitchen can pass a "white glove test."

For more information, call Island County WSU Cooperative Extension at 679-7327 or 321-5111, ext. 327, and request EB 1205, "Storing Foods at Home" (25 cents) and PNW 250, "You Can Prevent Food Poisoning" (50 cents).

Groundwater resource concerns aired at hearing

Island County residents will have the opportunity to air their concerns about the future of groundwater resources later this month. The state Senate Environment and Natural Resources will hold a public hearing on the issue at 7 p.m. Dec. 13 at the Commissioner Annex, 504 North Main Street in Coupeville.

"I scheduled this meeting after hearing from a large number of citizens concerned about the effects of development and population growth on the aquifers of Whidbey and Camano Islands," said Sen. Jack Metcalf, R-Langley, chairman of the committee. "On Camano and on Whidbey south of Oak Harbor, the only source for water is rainwater which seeps through the earth to recharge the underground aquifer.

Salt water intrusion is already a problem for many areas of Island County.

"Right now there are three main alternatives: conservation, restriction of development, or piping in water from the mainland," said Metcalf. "Each alternative has its own consequences and implications concerning the future of Island County. The policy decisions made in the next few years by state and local governments will be with us for decades to come."

Metcalf said local and state agency officials will be asked to give short presentations, and then the hearing will be opened to public testimony.

Metcalf said information gathered at the public hearing has statewide implications.

"Rapid growth and increasing groundwater withdrawals in many areas of the state have heightened the concern over the long-term condition of groundwater resources," said Metcalf. "What is happening now in Island County will soon be rampant in many other areas of the state. The testimony given at the Coupeville hearing will be invaluable for any future state policies."

Seniors need extra protection from cold

Physician members of the Washington State Medical Association warn that during the winter season seniors should take extra precautions to protect themselves against the cold weather.

Elderly persons are more susceptible to developing hypothermia, a condition characterized by a serious decrease in body temperature that can be life threatening. "As we get older, metabolism rates slow. That means it's more difficult for seniors to stay warm, particularly in the winter," says WSMA President Dr. Harold Clure.

Symptoms of hypothermia include weakness, slurred speech, confusion, shivering and clumsiness. "However, hypothermia can be prevented by wearing warm clothing, keeping homes well heated and by drinking plenty of fluids," says Clure. "Wearing a hat (both inside and out) is also a good idea since a great deal of body heat loss is through the head."

By taking care to stay dry and warm seniors can significantly reduce their risk of winter-induced illness.
