R. T. JONES
GOVERNOR

W. B. KELLY
SECRETARY

Executive Office
State House
Phoenix, Arizona

February 4, 1939

To: MEMBERS OF THE ARIZONA NATIONAL GUARD

Please accept my congratulations upon the publication of your Annual.

It is a splendid piece of work, quite in keeping with the high standard for which your organization is noted. It should be instrumental in instilling a feeling of respect for the Arizona National Guard in the hearts and souls of our citizens.

The unselfish spirit which moves you to give the greater part of each year to equipping yourselves for the defense of our beloved state is universally commended.

No less important than your duties as defenders of the commonwealth are your peace-time responsibilities. On repeated occasions you have proven yourselves excellent administrators where the ordinary machinery of government has broken down because of calamities or disasters.

Arizona is proud of you and I am honored to be

Your sincere,

Governor and Commander-in-chief.

ROBERT T. JONES

Governor of Arizona

COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF, ARIZONA NATIONAL GUARD

State of Arizona
Military Department
Phoenix

To the Members of the Arizona National Guard:

Under our plan of National Defense, the National element in the Army of the United States is of vital importance. In an emergency, the National Guard is the largest factor, numerically speaking, to carry out the role assigned.

The Guard must be trained; its discipline and morale must be of the highest order. To accomplish its aims, every member of the Guard must study, must think, and must work, WORK, W O R K, intelligently and persistently.

The National Guard of Arizona has made great progress in recent years toward its goal of adequate preparedness, but much remains to be done. The unselfish devotion and intelligent industry of all members of the Guard from Ranking Officer to the newest recruit is most highly appreciated.

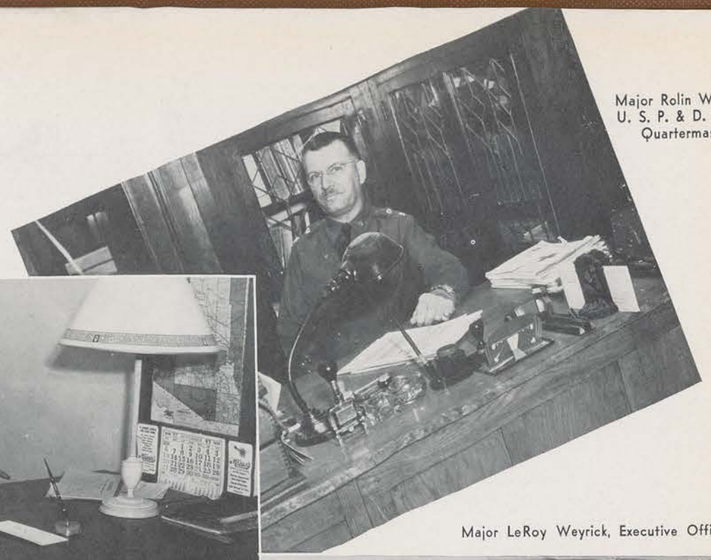

CARRY ON!

FORT TUTHILL

FLAGSTAFF, ARIZONA

The permanent summer Camp of the Arizona National Guard is located in the pine-covered hills of northern Arizona four and one-half miles southwest of the city of Flagstaff on the Oak Creek Road.*

Named for one of Arizona's outstanding soldiers, Fort Tuthill was first occupied by troops of the Arizona National Guard in the summer of 1930. It was located then on the opposite side of the tracks of the logging railroad from its present site and bore little resemblance to what is now considered one of the finest summer camps in the United States, both from the standpoint of permanent installations and scenic beauty.

Through the tireless efforts of Major LeRoy Weyrick, who has been charged by the Adjutant General with supervision of construction and improvement of the site, Fort Tuthill has grown from a group of wooden mess shacks and latrines to a fine, permanent installation of warehouses, mess halls, and latrines constructed of brick. The buildings form a square, with the guard house, warehouse, and caretaker's cottage on one side and the mess halls of the different battalions forming the other three. The whole is dominated by a huge water tank which supplies fresh water to the entire camp.

All tents are equipped with wooden floors. The officers' tents have become regular tent houses with wooden and screened sides and screen doors, being a far cry from early camps on this site when it was touch and go, whether you would remain in your tent or be washed out when hit by one of those torrential rains which strike this country with little or no warning, the altitude of the camp being exactly seven thousand feet.

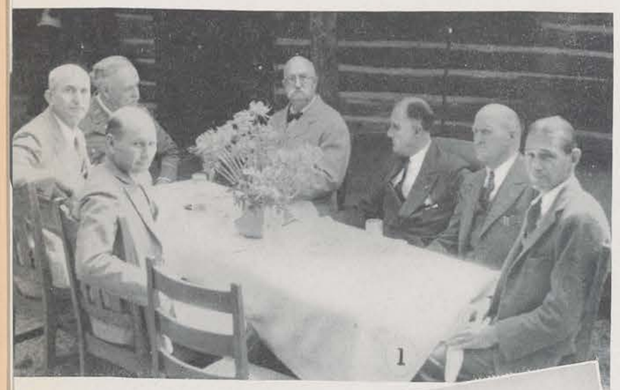

All ranks of the Arizona National Guard look forward to their annual two-week stay in this lovely camp amid the cooling mountain breezes and practically in the shadow of historic San Francisco peaks.

*Field training in 1938 was at Fort Huachuca, brigaded with the 25th Infantry in connection with Third Army Maneuvers.

HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE ARIZONA NATIONAL GUARD

Today the Arizona National Guard constitutes a well-armed and equipped and well-trained force of citizen-soldiery. Seventy-three years of organization and reorganization, aided and retarded by legislative action and directed by courageous and public-spirited men, stand back of this force. From a few companies of half-fed, half-clothed, and half-sick pioneers to a full regiment of Infantry, a battery of Field Artillery, a Quartermaster Company, Brigade Headquarters Company, State Staff and Detachment, and officers from a Division Staff, the Arizona National Guard today stands ready and waiting to protect Uncle Sam, his children, and their property.

DISTRESSING CONDITIONS

But, not in 1864. At that time Adjutant General W. H. Garvin presented to the third legislature, a report in which he deplored the distressing conditions regarding the Arizona Volunteers. He stated, "the territory is entirely destitute of arm and war equipment and without any territorial militia organization." He also pointed out that the regular Army troops were barely sufficient to guard the different military posts and could not give field service as native troops who were accustomed to the desert and mountains.

The first regiment of Infantry in Arizona was organized in 1865 under authority of Governor Goodwin from the War Department. The companies, to be known as the First Regiment of Infantry, Arizona Volunteers, and to have eighty to one hundred men, were to serve one year in Indian fighting, scouting, and escorting.

MARICOPA INDIANS

Company "B," Maricopa Wells, was the first to fill its quota, and was composed of Maricopa Indians. Company "C," Tucson, was composed of Pima Indians, and Companies "A" and "E" were composed of Arizonians. Company "F" had difficulty, and never saw service as a full Company. Oscar Hutton was temporarily mustered in as Second Lieutenant to recruit Company "F" up to standard, but soon after enlisting fifty-three men he was ordered to disband them and retain the original thirty-three which were the result of Captain Washburn's zeal in recruiting for Company "E."

From old letters and reports of the various officers we learn of the sufferings and privations of these troops, particularly Company "E," organized and commanded by Captain Hiram S. Washburn.

Lack of shelter, drenching rains and then fever descended upon these men before they were hardlly organized. Promised clothing did not arrive, and this sickly, ragged company soon became the laughing-stock of their countrymen.

Orders, December 4, 1865, for Companies "E" and "F" to report at Prescott caused consternation among the officers. They had twenty-nine sick men and would have to march; transportation was for baggage only. Enroute two died, two were slightly frostbitten, and the extreme cold caused much suffering among this bedraggled Company that again found shelter lacking, at Fort Whipple, December 29, 1865.

A few days later, January 4, 1866, orders to march to Camp Lincoln were received. Wagons loaded to twice capacity of the mules, bad roads, and stormy weather, made the trip long and tedious. At Camp Lincoln supplies were low and buckskin and raw-hide were used as substitutes for shoes. The men were put on half rations and were on point of starvation and disbanding when provisions arrived.

DISBAND AFTER 16 MONTHS

After sixteen months of service the Companies disbanded. The officers, disappointed in hopes and expectations, could not view their records with pride, and Captain Washburn, organizer, diplomat, and Indian fighter had used $500.00 of his own money and served four and a half months without pay—but—proved that native troops were superiors to others for field service in the territory.

For the next four years the territory was without an organized militia force. Governor of the Territory, A. P. K. Safford, October 18, 1869, issued a proclamation stating: "It is desirable that militia force may be formed to oppose more effectively the encroachment of the common enemy." Legislative action, 1870, authorized the Governor to organize the Volunteers and to consolidate one or more Companies or disband some whenever, in his opinion, such action should be necessary.

These Companies to consist of thirty to fifty men, who were to furnish bond of $40.00, value of gun, were to operate in conjunction with regular troops in protecting settlements and scouting against Indians along the border.

Seven years later in 1877, the legislature, realizing the need for a more effective territorial military force, authorized an organization of militia and appropriated $10,000.00 for its use. The First Regiment Infantry, Arizona Volunteers, was reconstituted into the First Arizona Infantry, and the Companies constituting same were to be used in Apache warfare.

History relates the atrocities of the Apaches during this time, and in 1881 many volunteer organizations, ranking as militia, organized in the desire to help fight the Apaches and to protect the citizens against outlaws.

Among the troops to form were the Galeyville Militia and the Phoenix Rangers. The former organized to protect citizens against outlaws and rustlers when crime in Cochise County centered in Galeyville, a town founded by and named after Mr. Galey, who opened the Texas mine, which was short-lived, but the town became hot with turbulent life. The Phoenix rangers organized by William O. O'Neill, who was fond of "bucking the tiger," and soon won the name of "Buckey," assisted General Crook against the Apaches.

A new militia code formed by legislative action in 1881 authorized reorganization of the Companies and the forming of new ones by application to the Commander-in-Chief. This new organization, to be known as the National Guard of Arizona, was to consist of ten companies of infantry, artillery, or cavalry, and to be used in the Indian wars.

Governor Tritle, 1884, ordered Adjutant General M. H. Sherman to inspect and take charge of all military property in the territory. Through the efforts of General Crook and the assistance rendered him, the territory was free from Indian depredations and the time expedient for inspection of military property, which heretofore had been in the hands of persons without authority to handle it.

Late in May, 1885, Geronimo, perhaps deciding the white man was becoming bored, broke out from Fort Apache Reservation, and in 1886 the campaign against him started. Any history will tell about the bloody wars of that time, but few will mention two young men who were later to play an important part in the history of the National Guard of Arizona.

TWO WOULD-BE SOLDIERS

One, a young man of twenty-two, was employed in the Adjutant General's office. He took no active part in the campaign; nevertheless, James H. McClintock was interested in the military activities.

The other, a boy of fifteen, with a longing for a military career, joined the Seventh California Infantry as a drummer boy. His parents had other plans for the lad, and when they found the hidden enlistment papers Alexander M. Tuthill's dreams of a military career faded—or did they?

During the Indian troubles Governor Zulick encouraged the formation of militia Companies, and over five hundred stands of arms were distributed to organized Companies. After the Indians had quieted, and apparently desired to remain so, a report on territorial militia was made, but it was a disappointment to the Governor. Only two Companies in Prescott could be accepted as regularly organized militia in 1887. Governor Zulick felt the imperfect laws regulating the militia of the territory were the cause and advocated reorganization and the passage of laws to make the militia an effective force of protection.

"Buckey" O'Neill, in 1889, was appointed Adjutant General. For several years he had been a prominent citizen of Prescott, and his personal integrity and good fellowship had won him a host of friends. Being public-spirited, and with a military leaning, he encouraged the formation of National Guard troops, and in 1890 Flagstaff, Prescott, Phoenix, Tucson, Florence, and Tombstone had Companies equipped with arms, clothes, and accoutrements.

A complete survey of the National Guard was made by Adjutant General O'Neill, and upon its completion he presented his report to the Governor. The Governor submitted this report to the sixteenth legislature in 1891 and recommended legislative action to establish a fund to provide for the actual expenses of the different Companies. The legislature must have been deeply impressed by this extensive and complete report, and they passed a new military law. All Companies of the National Guard were to reorganize, and each Company duly organized was to receive thirty dollars per month from the territorial treasury to help defray expenses.

"BUCKEY" AND PRESCOTT GREYS

At this time "Buckey" O'Neill again joined the ranks of the militia. During his term as sheriff of Yavapai County he was kept busy chasing dangerous men over a vast area, and fully realized the citizens needed more protection from bad Indians and white men. He organized the Prescott Greys and was Captain of them until 1897.

The year 1892 was one of reorganization for the National Guard. Two Companies, "A," Prescott, and "C," Flagstaff, disbanded. The armory in Flagstaff burned in 1891 and Company "C" lost its arms. This condition had a demoralizing effect upon the men and disbanding was recommended. Two new Companies, "K," St. Johns, and "A," Globe, were mustered into service, and Company "H," Yuma, underwent a complete reorganization. Companies in Phoenix, Florence, Tucson, Flagstaff, and Tombstone reorganized, and by the end of 1892, the National Guard consisted of nine uniformed and equipped Companies.

TARGET PRACTICE

Company "I," Flagstaff, was commended for its record in target practice in 1892. At the allotment of ammunition, this Company, for some reason, failed to receive a supply. One thousand rounds of ammunition were on hand but seven hundred were stolen from the armory. The remaining three hundred rounds were reserved in case the Company was called out. All shooting was done at the individual expense of members of the Company and, perhaps deciding to get value received from their money, they made a record to be proud of. In spite of having "nothing to shoot with" they made the best record in the regiment by nearly six per cent.

Adjutant General Schwartz, in 1894, recommended strengthening the infantry to twelve Companies. During this year the first hospital corps of the National Guard of Arizona was organized. No supplies could be obtained through military channels, and Adjutant General Schwartz personally bore the expenses. He was pleased with the general condition of the National Guard, which had an aggregate enrollment of five hundred three men; a gain of ninety-three men during the year.

The National Guard saw service in 1896. The promoters of the Fitzsimmons-Maher fight decided to hold the fight in the territory, but the Governors of Arizona and New Mexico decided differently, and instructed the Secretary of Interior to see the fight did not occur within the territory. The National Guard was called out and stationed in the vicinity. The thoroughness with which they handled the situation was soon evidenced when the promoters, fighters and followers were started east still uncertain as to the best man.

A call from the President for volunteers for the First United States Cavalry, to be used in the war with Spain, reduced the ranks of the National Guard by ten officers and one hundred seventeen men in 1898.

"BUCKEY" IS FIRST VOLUNTEER

Captain "Buckey" O'Neill, the first volunteer to be mustered in the Spanish-American War, was mayor of Prescott when the call came on April 23, 1898. He obtained a leave of absence; forgotten were politics and newspapers. All his enthusiasm was directed toward recruiting the northern part of the territory. James H. McClintock recruited the southern part, and by April 29, 1898, two troops of two hundred fifteen men, Arizona's allotment, were ready to leave.

Colonel Alexander O. Brodie, a military man, was the leader in organizing the First Volunteer Cavalry, and recommended Captain "Buckey" O'Neill and James H. McClintock become Senior Captains. Governor McCord did not like the idea.

Captain O'Neill had used his press to censure the Governor, and the Governor did not like to see his political enemy become a Senior Captain. Arguments, incriminations, and then success. Public duty was placed above personal prejudice, and "Buckey" O'Neill's nomination was wired to the War Department. Major A. O. Brodie was in command, Captain "Buckey" O'Neill in charge of Troop "A," and Captain James H. McClintock in charge of Troop "B."

In the battle of Santiago, Captain O'Neill's troop was awaiting orders from their commander to move forward.

Captain O'Neill, who had become the idol of his troop, stood up to see what caused the delay. A sergeant called to him to lie down, and with an airy wave of his cigarette he remarked, "the Spanish bullet was never moulded that will hit me." Then, a bullet, with the happy, courageous "Buckey" name on it, caught him in the mouth and death was instantaneous.

Captain McClintock, who gallantly led Troop "B," was named for brevet of Major. On June 24, he found three Spanish bullets, with his name on, lodged in his leg, and was not discharged from the hospital until Thanksgiving day.

When the call came in 1898 for infantry volunteers, the National Guard members desired to go. but the number wanted from Arizona was so small that it was decided that no Company would be ordered into service.

At this time, due to lack of adequate appropriations, all the Companies, "A" to "K" inclusive and the Regimental Band, lacked sufficient equipment and suitable armories, but despite this they were in a creditable condition and laying a foundation on which to develop a very effective force. The aggregate enrollment of the National Guard was, at this time, five hundred five men.

Legislation in 1899, for some reason, cut off all appropriations for National Guard maintenance. The officers, led by Adjutant General H. F. Robinson, paid all incidental expenses of the Companies and hoped for the best. These hopes were realized when a new militia code was authorized in 1901. Under this code appropriation for the necessary expenses of the National Guard was authorized, a salary for the Adjutant General was established, the officers were reimbursed for the money spent during the past two years, and all officers of each Company were to be elected by majority vote of members of Company present at time of election.

Company "B," availing themselves of Executive Order No. 1, went into encampment at Iron Springs on July 13, 1902. They named the place Camp O'Neill in honor of the late "Buckey" O'Neill. Regular drill was held twice a day and parade in the evening. Strict military discipline was maintained and the 53rd Article of War enforced, and ladies visiting the camp were never embarrassed by any language, regardless of how unexpectedly they arrived.

LABOR TROUBLE

July 14, 1902, Major James H. McClintock was elected, by unanimous vote, Colonel of the First Infantry, National Guard of Arizona. On June 9, 1903, the militia was called out when 3,500 miners at Morenci went on a strike. Colonel McClintock, fourteen officers, and one hundred eighty-five enlisted men from Companies "A," "B," "C," "E," "H," and First Troop, Nogales, handled the situation with firmness, fully protected the involved property and performed their duty intelligently and willingly.

During this labor trouble, the men saw unremitting toil, "some of the commands having done duty in the rain for thirty hours broken only by a few four-hour periods of rest."

When Company "I," Flagstaff, was notified to be ready they quickly responded, but due to the distance from the trouble and the necessity for haste, they were not called. Their disappointment was appeased when Governor and Commander-in-Chief Alexander O. Brodie commended the Company for "its desire to share the labor and the danger with which such work is usually attended."

Civic conditions returned to about normal within a week, but the public-spirited citizens of Morenci did not forget; they made application to the Governor for a troop of cavalry, and when authorization from Governor Alexander O. Brodie was received, Troop "A," National Guard of Arizona, was organized and the citizens of Morenci relaxed.

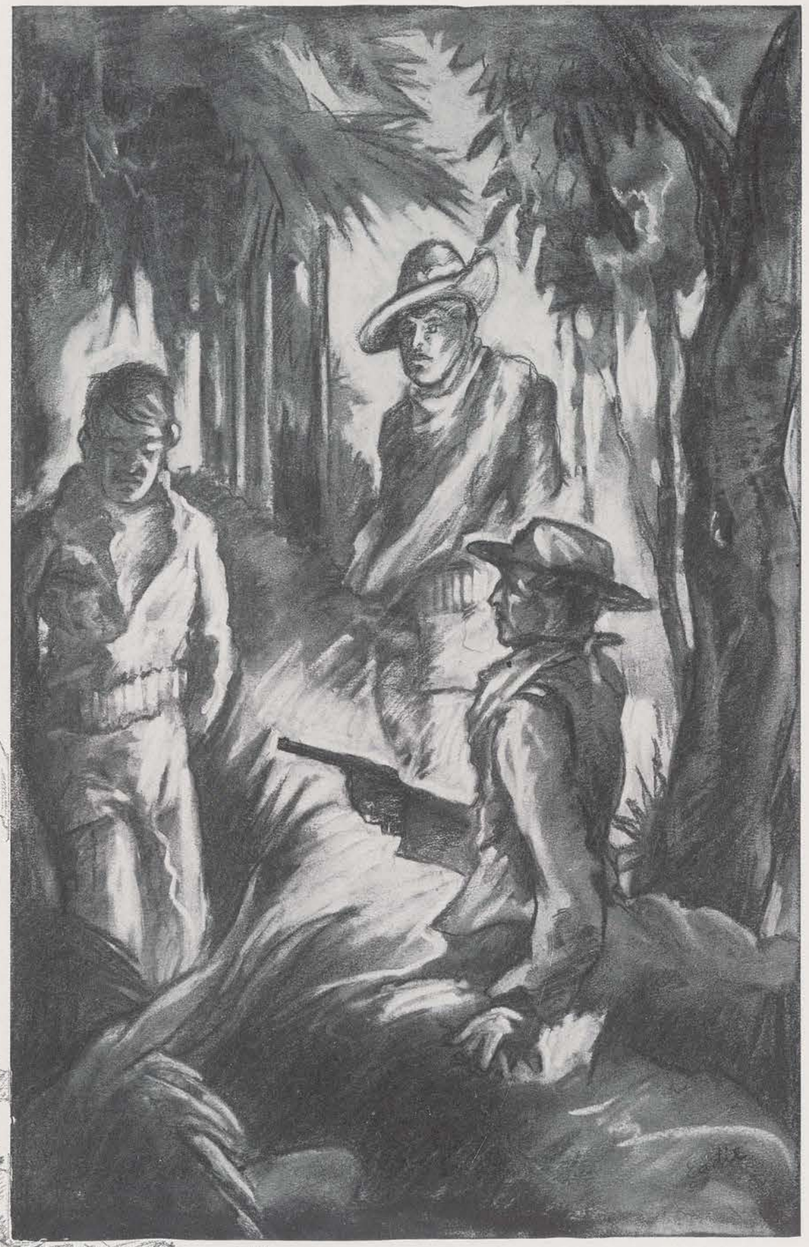

Doctor Alexander M. Tuthill, who had wanted to be a drummer boy, was organizer and Captain of this troop. Doctor Tuthill, a public-spirited man who took an active part in community affairs, was chief surgeon in the hospital of the Detroit Copper Company at Morenci, but success as a surgeon had not blotted out the dreams of youth.

DICK MILITIA BILL OF 1903

With the passage of the Dick Militia Bill of 1903, the National Guard was given better support locally and nationally. The bill provided for organization, armament, and discipline to be the same as the regular army. It provided for inspection of the National Guard by the regular Army officers; State encampments with regular Army officers as instructors, and for participation in general maneuvers with the regular Army troops and for pay, transportation, and subsistence during maneuvers.

One hundred eighty-six men and fifteen officers, with Colonel McClintock in command, went into encampment at the rifle range near Prescott, September 7 to 15, 1903. The small attendance was due to the lateness of the call; some of the men had taken summer vacations and additional time could not be had.

The encampment at Camp Brodie, named in honor of Governor Alexander O. Brodie, was honored by a visit from Governor Brodie, Commander-in-Chief, and Brigadier General B. W. Leavett, Adjutant General. After review of the regiment, inspection of the command, and view of the regimental parade, gratification with the appearance and discipline of the troops was expressed. The National Guard of Arizona had shown marked improvement during the past two years, and enactments to the military code aided greatly in this improvement.

Major A. O. Brodie, Captain "Buckey" O'Neill, and Captain James H. McClintock Gallantly Led the First Volunteer Cavalry, Arizona, in the Spanish-American War.

The second encampment of the National Guard, August 2 to 12, 1905, was attended by two hundred two men and twenty-three officers from Companies "B," Phoenix, "C," Tempe, "D," Mesa, "H," Yuma, "I," Flagstaff, First Troop, Nogales, and Second Troop, Morenci. Guard mount, company and battalion drills, non-commissioned and commissioned officers schools, and field exercises occupied the days and were of great value to all participating.

Under orders of the War Department and authority of an Act of Congress a battalion of infantry, consisting of Companies "B," "C," "H," and "I," took part in a general encampment near Austin, Texas, in August, 1906.

The National Guard of Arizona had gained valuable experience in home encampments in 1903 and 1905, and the regular Army officers at Camp Mabry informed the Adjutant General that the Arizona Battalion was the best militia organization at camp; however, their "association with Regulars gave them experiences and instructions which will ever be of value to the Guard."

Troop "A," in command of Captain Alexander M. Tuthill, did not attend the general encampment in Texas, but they went into camp about fifty miles from Morenci. They made the trip to and from camp mounted and gained much needed field experience.

1906 ENROLLMENT

While the enrollment of the National Guard was not as high in 1906 as during some of the past years, five companies, "B," Phoenix, "C," Tempe, "D," Mesa, "H," Yuma, "I,' Flagstaff, and Troop "A," Morenci, were fully organized and well-equipped for field service.

Nineteen Hundred and Eight was a year of expansion for the National Guard of Arizona. Four new Companies, "E," Prescott, "A," Phoenix, "F," Clifton, and "G," Buckeye, were mustered in. They were well organized and equipped but not experienced enough to form part of the battalion to attend the general encampment at Atascadero, California. Companies "D," "B," "H," and "C," with Colonel McClintock in command, participated in this encampment, and later all Companies attended the home encampment held at the Territorial Fair Grounds, Phoenix, because Camp Brodie proved unsatisfactory in 1907; transportation from the railroad was too distant, and over poor and often muddy roads.

Drill at least once a week was ordered for each Company in 1909. The ten Companies of infantry and one troop of cavalry were well equipped.

The Companies organized into battalions and great improvement and added interest were shown. Companies "A" and "B," Phoenix, "C," Tempe, and "D," Mesa, were designated the First Battalion, First Regiment of Infantry, National Guard of Arizona; Companies "E," Prescott, "I," Flagstaff, and "H," Yuma, the Second Battalion, and Companies "G," Buckeye, "F," Clifton, and "K," Tucson, the Third Battalion.

TWO NEW COMPANIES

Two new Companies in 1910 increased the aggregate total of the National Guard. Company "L," reorganized, of Yuma, was mustered in and assigned to the Second Battalion. Company "M," Florence, was mustered in and assigned to the Third Battalion. All obsolete equipment was replaced and eleven Companies of infantry and one of cavalry, uniformed and equipped, and ready for field service, comprised the National Guard of Arizona at this time.

July 25, 1910, saw the retirement of Colonel James H. McClintock, Commander of First Regiment of Infantry, National Guard of Arizona. For eight years he had been at the head of the regiment, and part of the time had acted as Adjutant General. He handled the trying labor trouble at Morenci with efficiency, and the first field service that the National Guard of Arizona participated in was under his direction.

Colonel McClintock, who was named for brevet of Major for distinctive service in the war with Spain, served the National Guard faithfully, and his retirement was a great loss to and regretted by all members of the Guard.

When Colonel McClintock retired, the command of the First Regiment of Infantry, National Guard of Arizona, was put into the hands of a progressive man who was interested in protection for the people and advancement of the National Guard of Arizona—Colonel Alexander M. Tuthill.

September 15, 1910, the First and Second Battalions, commanded by Colonel Alexander M. Tuthill, attended maneuvers at Atascadero, California. The following of the military rules of courtesy, the excellent appearance of the men and the number of Yuma Indians from Companies "H" and "L," Yuma, caused favorable comment, and familiarity with outdoor life aided greatly in the progress made.

The territorial Insane Asylum called for assistance from the National Guard on September 5, 1911. A fire was raging and Company "B," commanded by Captain Earl W. Hill, and a detail of eight enlisted men from Company "A" were ordered to report for duty. They soon had the situation well under control and fully protected the patients, public, and property involved.

Changes in the Military Code of Arizona and the regulations of government of the National Guard of Arizona were recommended by the Board of Officers in 1911. Such changes to be made so that the militia laws of the Territory would not conflict with those of the United States.

DIVISIONAL PLAN

A new plan of organization was adopted in 1913. The National Guard of Arizona was to consist of Staff Departments, Medical Corps, commissioned officers, companies organized and others to be organized not to exceed twenty-five hundred men in time of peace. A General Staff, to be appointed by the Governor and to consist of the Adjutant General and four National Guard officers, was to act as advisory board to the Governor and to have power to prescribe armory regulations and to consolidate or disband Companies.

The National Guard was ordered to Morenci October 2, 1915. Three thousand miners, desiring higher wages, went on a strike and the mine managers departed for El Paso, Texas, and forty-eight officers and men, commanded by Major H. Donkersley, reached the seat of trouble with all expedition. To insure order, more troops were sent for, and by November 6, 1915, conditions had returned to normal and they returned to home stations.

May 9, 1916, President Woodrow Wilson called forth the organized Militia of Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona to be employed in the service of the United States. As soon as the National Guard of Arizona was ready—two new organizations (Machine Gun Company and Supply Company), organized, all Companies recruited to maximum strength, property inventoried, and arrangements made for armories and property left behind—they were to move to a concentration camp, and by May 13, 1916, mobilization was complete and the National Guard of Arizona was stationed at Camp Harry J. Jones, Douglas, Arizona, until reporting to headquarters at Naco, Arizona. Troops from other States came to stations on the Mexican Border after the general call to Federal service in June.

The Arizona Regiment remained continuously on the border until war was declared April 6, 1917. Its designation was changed to 158th Infantry and it was assigned to the 79th Brigade, 40th Division, at Camp Kearney, California, near San Diego, California, until being sent overseas in July and August, 1918. They served in France with the 40th Division, and were mustered out May 3, 1919.

thority of a telegram from the War Department, was promoted to Brigadier General of the Line and assigned to command the 79th Brigade, 40th Division, and in his honor a regimental parade, followed by a band concert, was held August 22, 1917, at Naco, Arizona, and General Tuthill, for the last time as commanding officer, reviewed the First Arizona Infantry.

The 158th Infantry, in command of Colonel E. P. Grinstead, was signally distinguished and honored by being detailed to act as guard of honor to President Wilson during his residence in France in 1918.

An Act of Congress, June 4, 1920, authorized reorganization of the National Guard and embodied in this Act were provisions for the preservation of names and records of the National Guard organizations who had served in the World War, and on January 11, 1921, by authorization from the War Department the Arizona Cavalry troops were converted into Companies of Infantry, and styled as the 158th Infantry, National Guard of Arizona. They were so designated to perpetuate the Arizona Infantry, organized and mustered into service as the First Regiment of Infantry, Arizona Volunteers, in 1865, authorized as First Arizona Infantry by Territorial legislation in 1877, and designated as the 158th Infantry, 40th Division, under Federal Service in 1917.

Contained in the National Defense Act of 1916 were provisions for a sum to be appropriated annually for the support of the National Guard, for Federal inspection once a year by Regular Army officers, and the establishment of a Militia Bureau of the War Department. In 1921, Arizona accepted some of the benefits of this Act and all organized Companies complying with regulations for drills, target practice, and general efficiency, were to receive sixty dollars a month.

Thoughts of this inspection and the report to be forwarded to the Militia Bureau, Washington, D. C., enlivened the interests of the officers and men and an intensive period of armory training, range practice, and camp instructions followed.

A Government, realizing the need for a stronger and more efficient force of National Guard, encouraged expansion, and in 1924, Congress amended the National Defense Act. The period of enlistment was to be three years, with a minimum of forty-eight paid armory drills a year, and the same pay as corresponding grades of the Regular Army, transportation, and subsistence for a fifteen-day encampment each year.

Arizona was becoming proud of her National Guard. One thousand men immaculately uniformed and well trained, were an impressive sight on parade, and Arizona, parent like, wanted the public to view and appreciate this distinguished and honored force. In 1928 a law was passed that each Company of the National Guard should parade at least twice a year, the 22nd of February and the 30th of May, unless on Sunday and—leading these parades will be the spirits of the Courageous Captain Hiram S. Washburn whose prisoners always "died the next day and their souls sent marching on," the lovable Captain "Buckey" O'Neill, who asked, "who wouldn't die for a star," and the gallant Colonel James H. McClintock, and their contemporaries.

General Alexander M. Tuthill, one of the very few National Guard officers of any State to be promoted to Brigadier General during the World War, was commissioned Brigadier General December 1, 1928, and assigned to command the 89th Brigade, 45th Division, of the National Guard.

The ninth legislature in 1929, declared all acts, rules, and regulations of the National Defense Act that applied to the National Guard of States should apply to the National Guard of Arizona. This Act provided for the construction of armories and permanent training camps and the legislature appropriated $60,000.00 for the construction of same. The training camp at Flagstaff, a monument to Arizona's outstanding National Guardsman, was to be named Fort Alexander M. Tuthill.

A detachment of the National Guard of Arizona, in command of Captain George K. Rubel, participated in the ceremonies of dedication at the opening of the Lee's Ferry Bridge, June 14-15, 1929. Five men, two from Chandler, one from Buckeye, Mesa, and Phoenix assisted Company "I," Flagstaff, in directing the unusually heavy traffic, establishing communication lines and performing guard duty. "Regardless of the unusually strenuous duties they performed, they remained cheerful, willing, and loyal to the State and Service they represented."

Captain Oscar F. Temple, who had served with the Army during the Geronimo campaign, the Spanish-American War, the Boxer Uprising in China, and the World War, was appointed Adjutant General March 4, 1931. He was deeply interested in the National Guard of Arizona, and through his efforts a great many improvements were made possible.

Company "I," Flagstaff, commanded by Captain Clarence T. Pulliam, Machine Gun Company "M," Prescott, commanded by Captain Harry L. Mayfield, and Headquarters Company, Phoenix, commanded by Captain Francis L. J. Carroll, assisted by Lieutenant John H. Hanny, left on an expeditionary force into the vast, snow-covered mountain region of the Mogollon and Tonto country, April 20, 1933.

Directed by Adjutant General Oscar F. Temple, one hundred fifty men from the National Guard of Arizona assisted Army planes and searching parties in an effort to locate two northern Arizona citizens and their green and silver monoplane.

The efficiency of the National Guard of Arizona was displayed by their arrangement of headquarters, the establishment of radio communications, and their system of checking the dense, snow-covered forest region. On April 23, 1933, the plane was found and the National Guard returned to their home stations.

Encroachment upon Arizona soil was prevented by the National Guard in 1934. The Metropolitan Water District of a neighboring State decided to build a diversion dam on the Colorado River in the vicinity of Parker, but thoughts of invading the State ceased when the Governor ordered out part of the National Guard. Under command of Major Franklin I. Pomeroy, the contingent of the National Guard, equipped with tents, cots, blankets and a supply truck established headquarters at the Parker damsite, where they remained for eight months. On November 11, 1934, danger of invasion past, they left the river "front" for home.

An Act by legislature in 1935, provided for life commissions for National Guard officers retired on account of age. Many officers had, through the years, served faithfully and well the organization they had helped to perfect, and this Act entitled them to retain their rank and commission for life and to be an honorary member of the general staff and to serve in an advisory capacity.

Major General Tuthill was appointed Adjutant General February 5, 1936. The responsibilities of this appointment are dexteriously handled by the man who made the dreams of youth become realities.

General Tuthill is an ardent supporter of the National Guard of Arizona, and his zeal and enthusiasm have aided greatly in the expansion and development of this splendid force.

Chasing Indians across the sun-baked desert, quelling striking miners, braving blizzard to find storm-wrecked pieces of humanity, sweating under the summer sun to protect State rights, drills, rifle practice, encampments, acts of Congress and legislative enactments have gone into the making of the remarkable force that today constitutes the Arizona National Guard.

Major General, The Adjutant General
(Awarded Arizona Gold Medal for Over 20 Years' Service)

Ditat Deus

The purposes of this part of the National Guard under present War Department plans are:

(1) To constitute a nucleus of personnel for the administration, sanitation, supply, transportation, mobilization, and recruiting of the National Guard in both State and Federal service.

(2) To constitute for use in a national emergency, a nucleus of National Guard officers and enlisted men trained to prepare and place in operation plans for procurement of personnel by recruiting and by selective service.

The authorized strength for the State Staff and State Detachment in Arizona, based on National Guard strength in the State, is eight officers and twenty-two enlisted men. The Adjutant General of a state is generally a member of the State Staff when eligible for Federal recognition, but for many years the State Staff of Arizona has consisted of but seven officers, the Adjutants General having been officers retired from Federal status because of reaching age limit.

For the past ten years, Major Rolin W. Shaw, Q. M. C., has been the senior officer on State Staff and in command of the State Detachment.

FORTY-FIFTH DIVISION

(ARIZONA ALLOTMENT)

The 45th Division being composed of troops from the States of Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico and Oklahoma has its headquarters divided among those states. The allotment to Arizona consists of four officers as follows: Lieutenant Colonel Garland M. White, Assistant Chief of Staff, G-1. Lieutenant Colonel Frank J. Duffy, Judge Advocate General. Major Herbert R. Jordan, Assistant Adjutant General. Captain Frank E. Fraser, Aide-de-Camp.

GARLAND M. WHITE
Lieut. Col. Infantry, G-1

FRANK J. DUFFY
Lieut. Col., Judge Advocate General

LT. COL. GARLAND M. WHITE
Infantry
Assistant Chief of Staff—G-1

The Personnel Section of the General Staff of Division headquarters is charged with general staff functions which relate to the personnel of the command. He exercises supervision over the following departments: Adjutant General's, Inspector General's, Chaplain's, Judge Advocate General's, Medical, Provost Marshal and Headquarters Commandant.

Lieutenant Colonel Garland M. White, enlisted Company "C" First Arizona Infantry, 1913. Assisted in reorganizing Company "C," 158th Infantry after the war and promoted First Lieutenant Infantry, 1924, promoted Captain 1930 and assigned division staff, promoted Major 1931 and to Lieutenant Colonel 1933. Graduate Infantry School 1925. Member of the Arizona Rifle Team 1914, 1924, 1925, 1928. Distinguished Marksman 1924.

LT. COL. FRANK J. DUFFY
Judge Advocate General, 45th Division

The Judge Advocate General of the division is adviser to the commander and other members of the command in proper cases, on questions of law. He has supervision of the administration of military justice within the command. He reviews and makes recommendations as to the action to be taken upon the proceedings of military courts.

Lieutenant Colonel Duffy's service began in 1915 as supervisor of piece and new work production and later as assistant chief inspector in the Charleston Navy Yard. Upon removal to Arizona he became interested in military matters and was appointed Captain Arizona State Staff, (JAGD) 1927; promoted Major 1932; promoted Lieutenant Colonel 1933 and assigned Judge Advocate General 45th Division. Colonel Duffy has had several cases before the Arizona Supreme Court clarifying the position of the National Guard.

CAPTAIN FRANK E. FRASER
Aide-de-Camp

The aide is part of the personnel staff of the Division Commander and his duties are such as his commander may assign him. He is, in addition, an assistant to any General Staff section requiring his services, if so assigned.

Captain Fraser's military service began with Troop B Cavalry, Washington National Guard, 1915. Border service and overseas service serving in France, Belgium, Luxembourg and Germany, in both defensive and offensive sectors in the combat zone. Appointed Second Lieutenant 1927; First Lieutenant 1929, and Captain 1932. Captain Fraser served as president Arizona National Guard Association the past year. He is now Military Aide to Governor Jones as well as serving in same capacity to former Governors.

MAJOR HERBERT R. JORDAN
Assistant Adjutant General, 45th Division

The division Adjutant General's office under supervision of AC of S G-1, is the office of record and handles correspondence, orders and personnel matters in general. It operates the Army postal service.

Major Jordan's military service began with the World War as a private in 8th Regular Army Division. Commissioned First Lieutenant 1923, promoted Captain Infantry 1926 and Major 1933. Assigned to active duty in the office of Adjutant General State of Arizona as Personnel Officer 1931.

HERBERT R. JORDAN
Major, Assistant Adjutant General

FRANK E. FRASER
Captain, Infantry, A.D.C.

JOHN R. EVANS
Captain, S-1
Headquarters, 89th Brigade

Eighty-Ninth
INFANTRY BRIGADE

(ARIZONA ALLOTMENT)

During the World War, as now, the Arizona Infantry regiment was brigaded with the Infantry of Colorado. At that time the two regiments, together with a Brigade Machine Gun Battalion, constituted the 79th Infantry Brigade of the 40th Division. After reorganization of National Guard divisions, Arizona became part of the newly formed 45th Division and the brigades were accordingly numbered as the 89th and 90th.

Federal recognition for a brigade headquarters was given as of December 1, 1928, the first officer appointed being General A. M. Tuthill as brigade commander. He retained command until his promotion in 1933 to rank of Major General and command of the division. The senior Colonel in the brigade, William E. Guthner, of Colorado, was promoted to Brigadier General and has commanded the brigade since that time.

Arizona was allocated the position of Brigade Adjutant and Captain Leonard M. Cowley (now Major, IGD, State Staff), was first Adjutant, holding the assignment until October 17, 1932, when he was followed by Captain Osborn G. Johnson. Captain John R. Evans, the present Brigade Adjutant, was promoted from First Lieutenant in the Howitzer Company to fill the vacancy in 1935 caused by resignation of Captain Johnson. All other brigade staff officers are in Colorado. To Arizona is also allocated the Headquarters Company of the brigade.

Field Artillery

(ARIZONA ALLOTMENT)

BATTERY E, SECOND BATTALION

FACTUAL HISTORY

Battery "B," forerunner of the present Battery "E," 158th Field Artillery, was organized at Mesa, Arizona, on March 24, 1921, with Captain Donald H. Biery as commanding officer. Drills were held in the basement of the old Vance building (now the Mezona Recreational hall), where the guns and equipment were housed. The horses were kept in stables rented from the Kleinman Livery Stables. The Battery's present armory was built by the State of Arizona in 1921 on South MacDonald Street. When the First Battalion, 158th Field Artillery, was organized in Oklahoma, the Mesa unit was designated Battery "E," its only designation.

Referred to as the "Wandering Battery," this unit has attended field training in five different camps. From 1921 through 1926, camp was held at Fort Bliss, Texas; in 1927 and 1928, Fort Huachuca, Arizona; from 1929 to 1932, due to shortage of horses at the Arizona camp, training was at Fort Bliss; motorized in 1933, the unit motored to Flagstaff, Arizona, in four Chevrolet trucks and one station wagon; from 1935 to 1937, at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, and in 1938, the unit joined the Third Army maneuvers at Camp Bullis, San Antonio, Texas. In the last four years, Battery "E" has traveled approximately 9,000 miles to and from camp.

To make these trips more interesting and educational, Captain George L. Brown routed the Battery by Dallas to visit the Texas Centennial in 1936, and in 1937, the unit spent one day at Carlsbad Cavern, New Mexico.

(ARIZONA ALLOTMENT)

COMPANY D, FIRST BATTALION

The 120th Quartermaster Regiment was organized in 1923 and 1924 as the Forty-fifth Division Quartermaster Train and was redesignated as the 120th Quartermaster Regiment on June 22, 1936. The first unit organized in the Regiment was Company "A," which was established and Federally recognized at Claremore, Oklahoma, as the 179th Transport Company on May 18, 1923. The 120th Quartermaster Regiment absorbed all existing units of the Forty-fifth Division Quartermaster Train and the Quartermaster Section, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Forty-fifth Division, when it was redesignated in 1936.

Company "D," 120th Quartermaster Regiment, was organized by Captain Richard F. Lush at Phoenix and Federally recognized on April 1, 1937. Second Lieutenant Victor E. Anderson was second in command. As no quarters were available for the new organization, drills were held on the floor of the Phoenix Armory. In the next three months, clothing and equipment were received and quarters finally allotted in the new National Guard arsenal.

Being a motorized unit, Company "D" transported the Phoenix troops of the 158th Infantry to Flagstaff for the annual encampment in 1937. Motor vehicles from the State Pool were used. The Company very successfully participated in the 1938 Third Army Maneuvers at Fort Huachuca, Arizona. No serious accidents have been experienced by this Company, which particularly stresses highway safety.

Regimental Headquarters for Company "D" is at Oklahoma City, Okla.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHTH

Infantry

The record of the 158th Infantry, 45th Division, National Guard of Arizona, is filled with the heroic deeds of individuals, the untiring and patriotic service of groups of hardy men, and the struggle to maintain against great odds a sufficient military organization for the protection of the citizens and property of the State.

Originally organized as the First Regiment of Infantry, Arizona Volunteers, in 1865, this brilliant organization has more than 73 years to glorious tradition which is being upheld by the present members of the National Guard of Arizona. The sufferings and privations of the men who formed these first companies were indications of the unflinching service to be given by their successors.

After these troops were disbanded, having served for 16 months, the State was without an organized militia force for four years. In 1870, legislative action authorized the Governor to organize the Volunteers and to consolidate one or more companies or to disband the same whenever, in his opinion, such action should be necessary. They were to operate in conjunction with regular troops in protecting settlements and scouting against Indians along the border.

When the Legislature in 1877 authorized an organization of militia and appropriated $10,000 for its use, the First Regiment of Infantry, Arizona Volunteers, was reconstituted into the First Arizona Infantry. The companies were to be used in Apache warfare.

A militia code in 1881 authorized the reorganization of the companies and the forming of new ones. The new organization, to be known as the National Guard of Arizona, was to consist of 10 companies of infantry, artillery, or cavalry, and to be used in the Indian wars. In 1889 and 1890, further reorganization and perfecting of the militia took place. By the end of 1892, the National Guard consisted of nine uniformed and equipped companies, while in 1894 the first hospital corps of the National Guard of Arizona was organized.

When the call came in 1898 for infantry volunteers, the Arizona National Guard members wanted to go, but the number wanted from the State was so small that it was decided that no company would be ordered into service. When all appropriations for National Guard maintenance was cut off in 1899, officers maintained the companies until a new militia code was authorized in 1901 and the Guard was again put on a sound basis.

158TH INFANTRY

Another spur given to the National Guard was the passage of the Dick Militia Bill of 1903. The development of the present-day 158th Infantry was greatly aided by this bill. In 1906, five companies were fully organized and well equipped for field service, and in 1908 four new companies were mustered in, with two more in 1910.

On May 9, 1916, several weeks ahead of the general call, President Woodrow Wilson called the organized Militia of Arizona, New Mexico and Texas to be employed in the service of the United States, and by May 13, 1916, mobilization was complete and the National Guard of Arizona was stationed at Camp Harry J. Jones, Douglas, Arizona, until reporting to headquarters at Nace, Arizona. Then in 1917, the men were furnished with certificates of discharge from the National Guard and entered the 158th Infantry, 40th Division, and served in France. They were mustered out May 3, 1919.

Under an act of Congress, June 4, 1920, the Arizona Cavalry troops were converted into companies of Infantry, and designated the 158th Infantry, National Guard of Arizona. They were so designated to perpetuate the Arizona Infantry, organized and mustered into service as the First Regiment of Infantry, Arizona Volunteers, in 1865, authorized as the First Arizona Infantry by Territorial legislation in 1877, and designated as the 158th Infantry, 40th Division, under Federal service in 1917.

From its first days as a band of Indian fighters to its present status as a group ready to protect lives and property and to fight for the United States, the Arizona militia, now designated the 158th Infantry, has been an aggressive, fighting, and patriotic organization, which has set and upheld glorious traditions.

FACTUAL HISTORY

On May 15, 1929, Headquarters Company, 158th Infantry, took its place in the Arizona National Guard. It was mustered in with a great deal of ceremony, as all ex-service organizations were actively interested in having the unit formed.

F. L. J. Carroll, past Department Commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and past president of the Reserve Officers of Arizona, had worked very hard to have the Guard expanded whereby this Company could be formed. For his efforts, he became the first Company commander. Since the date of inception into the National Guard of Arizona, Headquarters Company has been one of the outstanding units in the National Guard of the United States, as typified by the streamers attached to its guidon staff. These represent the winning of many Federal inspections and special awards offered by various civic organizations for proficiency. It has supplied many marksmen who have assisted in winning matches, not only within the regiment but within the Eighth Corps Area.

For a number of years the radio station maintained by this unit was one of two large stations operating in Arizona. Because of the specialized type of work needed for the technical and tactical duties, recruiting is limited to men qualified for specific duties.

The Company although not old in years of service has established many records, promising to always stand high in National Guard circles.

FACTUAL HISTORY

Organized at Douglas, Arizona, in June, 1916, as Supply Company, First Infantry, under the command of Captain A. C. Taylor, this unit was drafted into Federal service as Supply Company, 158th Infantry, on August 5, 1917, and served throughout the World War as such until May 3, 1919, when the 158th Regiment was mustered out.

Reorganized and recognized as Service Company, 158th Infantry, at Phoenix on June 22, 1923, it has remained the same to date.

The Company has had seven commanders. Some are still active in the Regiment, including Major Edward J. McNamee, now Battalion Commander, Third Battalion; Captain Edgar J. Maxwell, now a member of the State Staff, Arizona National Guard, and Captain Rene M. Pincetl, now Assistant S-3 of the Regiment.

FACTUAL HISTORY

The first Howitzer Company in Arizona's National Cuard made its appearance in Flagstaff on June 1, 1924, when, by order of the Adjutant General of Arizona, as approved by the Chief of Militia Bureau, Battery "D," 158th Field Artillery, was redesignated Howitzer Company, 158th Infantry. On June 1, 1924, First Lieutenant Hillard H. Lewis was appointed Captain and assigned to command, with First Lieutenant Gustave A. Boenich and Second Lieutenant Buster C. Thorton as his junior officers.

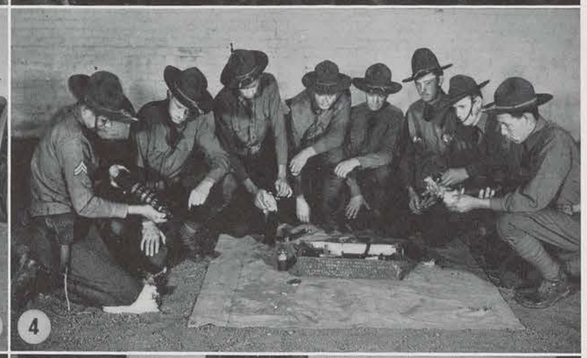

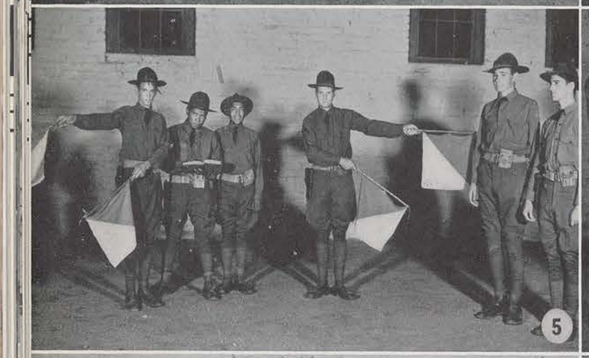

During the time that the Company was in Flagstaff, it was commanded by these three officers: Captain Hillard H. Lewis, from June 1, 1924, to August 5, 1925; Captain Merrill C. Windsor, from August 5, 1925, to October 5, 1925, and Captain Roy Potter, from October 5, 1925, to September 1, 1926.

On September 1, 1926, the Howitzer Company in Flagstaff was redesignated Company "I," 158th Infantry, and on that same date, Company "G," 158th Infantry, was redesignated Howitzer Company in Mesa, Arizona. Captain Delbert L. Stapley was assigned to command the company with First Lieutenant William F. Bowden as junior officer.

On December 5, 1927, Captain Stapley was appointed Major to command the Third Battalion. First Lieutenant William F. Bowden was promoted to Captain and assigned the command, which he retained until May 10, 1937, when he was transferred to the inactive National Guard. First Lieutenant Harrie E. Hunsaker was appointed Captain and assigned command with First Lieutenant James B. Anderson and Second Lieutenant Othello O. Richins as junior officers.

Reorganized and Federally recognized after the World War on May 21, 1921, in Phoenix, under the command of First Lieutenant Foster, Headquarters Company, First Battalion, 185th Infantry, was mustered out June 30, 1927, and again mustered in at Tempe, Arizona, on July 1, 1927, under the command of First Lieutenant Garland M. White, with Wesley B. Sullivan as Second Lieutenant. The latter was succeeded in 1928 by Second Lieutenant V. Lee Raymond.

In 1930, White was transferred to the 45th Division Staff as Assistant Adjutant General and Captain. First Lieutenant Merton Mortenson was in command with John R. Patterson, who had enlisted as a private, as Second Lieutenant. Patterson succeeded Mortenson in command in 1931. Sergeant Michael E. Curry was made Second Lieutenant. On May 20, 1933, Sergeant William L. Thompson was made Second Lieutenant when Curry was transferred to the State Staff as Captain.

In 1938, Lieutenant Thompson, promoted to First Lieutenant, transferred to Company "D," 158th Infantry. Sergeant Maurice C. Graham was made Second Lieutenant. On November 5, 1938, Lieutenant Patterson was transferred to Company "D" as commander, and Lieutenant Thompson was transferred to Headquarters Company, First Battalion, as commander.

This unit has won the Sheldon Trophy for rifle marksmanship three times, 1928-1929-1937. Since recognition, the Company has had some member on the rifle team at Camp Perry, with Lieutenants White and Curry being Distinguished Marksmen, the former winning this honor at Camp Perry.

Always among the highest in Federal Inspection, the unit has maintained an excellent attendance, winning the streamer for attendance one year.

FACTUAL HISTORY

Originally organized on October 7, 1865, as a part of the First Arizona Territorial Troops, Company "A" assisted in the protection of settlers against hostile Indians. Poorly equipped, clothed and paid, this unit was disbanded after little more than a year of service, then reorganized again in 1882.

Disbanded again and reorganized in 1890 as a territorial troop, most of its members were discharged to enlist in the United States Volunteers for the Spanish-American War. The unit reorganized in 1903, reorganized in 1908, and on June 3, 1916, for service on the Mexican Border.

Mustered into Federal service on August 5, 1917, Company "A" went overseas for the World War and served as a replacement organization, being held at a training camp in France charged with the duty of training replacements for front line units. Reorganization following the World War as Troop "A," First Cavalry, Phoenix, on March 25, 1920; redesignated Company "A," 158th Infantry, January 11, 1921; disbanded on June 16, 1927, at Phoenix, and reorganized on June 17, 1927, at Nogales.

For the next two years, the Company armory was a store room or building, but since the erection of the present armory in 1929, the unit has had a large building with necessary conveniences.

The Company went to Fort Huachuca, Arizona, for encampments in 1927, 1928, and 1929, and in the following years to Fort Tuthill near Flagstaff, Arizona. In 1938, it encamped at Fort Huachuca for field maneuvers.

FACTUAL HISTORY

Company "B," 158th Infantry, was Federally recognized at Buckeye, June 9, 1930, having previously been recognized as Troop "B," Cavalry, October 27, and redesignated Company "D," 158th Infantry, June 11, 1921.

At the time of reorganization at Buckeye, the unit was commanded by Capt. Geo. K. Rubel, with First Lieut. Fred C. Mehl and Second Lieut. Horace J. Winn. The unit was soon reorganized with local men and First Lieut. Calvin R. Sanders and Second Lieut. Paul S. Shoemaker were commissioned. Capt. John C. Wilson replaced Captain Rubel and First Lieut. Rufus B. Branum and Second Lieut. Wm. C. Vaughn became the junior officers. Vaughn resigned and Cecil D. Miller was appointed.

The unit made a rapid and steady progress. A new Armory site was obtained in 1936. First Lieut. Paul Shoemaker and Second Lieut. Robert C. Caffey became the junior officers. The unit has participated in each field training period since Federal recognition. The organization won the Frazier trophy in 1937, which trophy is awarded for the greatest unit improvement.

FACTUAL HISTORY

Originally organized as Company "C," Arizona Territorial Troops at Prescott, Arizona, on September 2, 1865, this unit fought against hostile Indians until disbanded several years later. It was reorganized in 1882 and again in 1890.

After the Spanish-American War, in which most of the personnel of this unit served with the "Rough Riders," Company "C" was again organized in 1903. After another period of inactivity, it was again reorganized on June 3, 1916, for service on the Mexican Border. Mustered in on August 5, 1917, for the World War, it sent most of its members to the Western front for service as replacements in other units.

On January 29, 1929, it was again organized as Company "C," 158th Infantry, and located at Douglas, Arizona, where it has remained to the present. In 1933, the Company was awarded the Imler trophy for having the best ordnance in the State. A squad of Company "C" was appointed the Chief of Infantry's combat team from Arizona National Guard in 1935. These men were winners in the combat firing problem at Fort Tuthill.

Two riflemen of the unit have been on National Guard Teams at Camp Perry, Ohio. They were Herron C. Phillips in 1935, and R. E. Swain in 1936. The Company furnishes a firing squad for the graveside services of veterans.

The Douglas Company was the only National Guard organization in the American Legion parade July 4, 1938. It also took part in the parade of 1937.

FACTUAL HISTORY

Company "D," 158th Infantry, was first organized at Tucson as part of the First Arizona Infantry on June 5, 1890, and was commanded by Captain Allan C. Bernard. It was located in Mesa, Arizona, from 1907 to 1916. It was recognized June 3, 1916, and did Mexican Border duty during 1917 and went to France in 1918. After service in France during the World War, the unit returned to Casa Grande, Arizona, and was mustered out. The organization was commanded by Captain Jesse M. Smith during the war.

Company "D" was recognized as Company "H," 158th Infantry, May 14, 1921, at Casa Grande and was placed under the command of Captain Richard H. Peart. In 1923, it was redesignated as Company "D," 158th Infantry, and remained under the command of Captain Peart. On June 14, 1923, the present Casa Grande Armory was completed and dedicated to the service by the late Governor George W. P. Hunt.

Company "D" has won many honors during its existence, including the Jordan Trophy in 1935 while under the command of Captain Henry F. Dobyns, who while in command of the Company was stricken ill and died on October 31, 1938. Captain Dobyns was replaced by First Lieutenant John R. Patterson on November 5, 1938. Lieutenant Patterson had served as commanding officer of Headquarters Company, First Battalion, 158th Infantry, for a period of eight years.

The Company at present is located at Casa Grande, Arizona, and is still under the command of Lieutenant Patterson. The members are looking forward to many years of service to State and Nation.

FACTUAL HISTORY

Twenty-one different Indian tribes representing several localities throughout the United States are included among the commissioned and enlisted personnel of Company "F," 158th Infantry, Arizona National Guard, the only all-Indian military organization in the National Guard of the United States.

After serving on the Mexican Border in 1916 and 1917, Company "F" lost its identity as an Indian unit soon after the Arizona regiment was mustered into Federal service for duty overseas with the American Expeditionary Forces during the World War.

After the war the Company was reorganized and Federally recognized May 29, 1924, and since that date the Company has maintained a record of high efficiency in the performance of its duties.

Those who commanded the unit since it was reorganized include Captain Jacob F. Duran, Captain Merrill Windsor, and its present commander, Captain Stewart Lewis.

Company "F" was awarded highest place as the outstanding unit during the annual Federal inspection for 1931. This Company received the award for highest drill attendance at armory drills for the years 1931, 1932, and 1933.

In 1930 Company "F" rifle team won the regimental team match staged annually on Washington's birthday. Captain Stewart Lewis and Sergeant Joe C. Juan were members of the Arizona National Guard rifle team that fired in the National Rifle matches at Camp Perry, Ohio, in 1929 and 1930. Sergeant Martin Lewis was a member of the regimental rifle team in 1935, and Sergeant Leeds R. Soatikee fired with the rifle team at Camp Perry in 1938.

Among the tribes which are included in the present personnel of the Company are Apache, Cherokee, Chimatcha, Chippewa, Creek, Crow, Gros Ventre, Hualapai, Hopi, Maricopa, Mission, Mojave, Mono, Navajo, Paiute, Papago, Pima, Pueblo, Sioux, Washoe, and Yuma.

FACTUAL HISTORY

Company "G," 158th Infantry, was organized, mustered in, and Federally recognized on September 9, 1926. The Graham County courthouse's basement was used as an armory, and the Company drilled in the street in front of the courthouse. When organized, all its sergeants were ex-service men who joined to help get the organization started.

With a 1929 legislative appropriation of $20,000, an armory was built in Safford. The Company moved into its new home in the fall of 1929. The building was not completed, though, until 1931, when Major Jesse A. Udall, elected to the State Legislature, secured an additional appropriation to complete the armory, one of the State's finest.

At its first encampment in 1927, Company "G" won the Governor's Day Field Meet. Duplicating the feat in 1928 and 1929, it secured permanent possession of the cup. Under Mess Sergeant Monroe Claridge, Company "G" won the Governor's Trophy for the best mess in 1929 camp. A squad from the unit won the 1932 Chief of Infantry combat competition. The unit won the Adjutant's ribbon for first place in 1937 Federal Inspection.

Company "G" has always attempted to qualify a large percentage of men with the rifle, not attempting to make match shots. Lieutenants Pursley and Palmer made the Camp Perry rifle team for two years. Corporal Otho Johnson made the 1938 team. Company "G" won the 1937 Midgley Trophy for excellence in Musketry and Rifle Marksmanship. This year the rifle team won the Sheldon Trophy from the Washington's Birthday State Rifle Match.

FACTUAL HISTORY

Federally recognized October 16, 1923, Company "H" was commanded for five years by its organizer, Captain (now Lieutenant Colonel) Elbert C. Monro. Upon his promotion in 1928 Monro turned the unit over to his well-liked Lieutenant, George T. Hawke. Captain Hawke was forced to resign two years later because of ill health.

When the unit first went to Fort Tuthill in 1930 it had a new commander, Captain Gibbs, who guided the Company for five years. Transferred to the staff as Adjutant in 1935, he was replaced by the present commanding officer, Captain Michael. Officers still in the regiment who served at one time or another under Gibbs or Michael are Captains Stofft and Merchant, and First Lieutenants Pemberton, Bess, and Diaz.

Transferred from Company "E" at the beginning of 1938, First Lieutenant Gibson and Second Lieutenant Jarrold took over like veteran machine gunners while the C. O. was assigned elsewhere, and, aided by the experience of the non-coms, successfully guided the Company through two important events—the armory inspection and the Third Army Maneuver.

Company "H" is proud of having won the Jordan trophy in 1933, the armory inspection in 1935, and the regimental machine-gun match in 1937. It is prouder yet of its spirit of team-work as part of the battalion and regiment; of the splendid attitude displayed by every man in carrying out the missions of the Third Army Maneuver, and of the never-say-die morale that stops for no discomforts or difficulties when the guns need to be moved or served.

FACTUAL HISTORY

Company "I," 158th Infantry, first organized in Flagstaff, Arizona, on June 6, 1891, by order of the Territorial Legislature, was designated Company "I," First Arizona Infantry, under the command of a United States Military Academy graduate, Captain Kislinberry. The unit drilled in Powell Hall, which stood on the ground now occupied by the Flagstaff Steam Laundry.

Although existing records do not show it, Flagstaff old-timers say another Company was organized in 1892 by George Hoherderffer. It is not known whether this unit, designated Company "I," was formed from the remnants of the other outfit or was in addition to it.

First quartered in a small house which still stands on the southwest corner of Santa Fe Avenue and Kendrick Street, this unit acquired quarters on the second floor of Babbitt Hall, the building now occupied by Babbitt Bros. Trading Company store. When the G. A. R. Hall was constructed in 1900, the unit moved there.

On April 16, 1916, the unit was designated a Machine Gun Company. The records at this point are not plain, but Company "I," 158th Infantry, served with the Regiment in France under the command of Captain E. M. Robison.

In Phoenix on May 26, 1920, Battery "A," First Arizona Field Artillery, was organized. On October 12, 1921, the designation was changed to Battery "D," 158th Field Artillery, and on June 1, 1924, it was redesignated Howitzer Company, 158th Infantry, which unit remained in Flagstaff until September 1, 1926, when it was again redesignated Company "I," 158th Infantry, bringing the old original outfit back home.

The present new, modern Armory, completed by the State in 1936, is a far cry from old Powell Hall, but the present state of training and efficiency is actuated by the same desire that caused the formation of that first unit—preparedness!

FACTUAL HISTORY

Organized to complete the Third Battalion, Company "K," 158th Infantry, was mustered into National Guard service on July 30, 1930. Its first encampment was Fort Tuthill in 1930. Due to the short period remaining before departure for the encampment, recruiting was not very strict and all types of characters were accepted. Under the able guidance of First Sergeant Homer Quist, the recruits performed commendably.

During the command of Captain Walter K. Tweedy, the Company became a very efficient organization and the personnel was selected from the very best material. This command was called out on the Communist riot at Phoenix, Arizona, in September, 1934, and was sent on the Colorado River Expeditionary Force to Parker, Arizona, in November, 1934, where martial law had been declared by Governor B. B. Moeur.

The Company also furnished 21 men to the Arizona State Prison during July and October of 1938 when Governor Stanford declared martial law. On all occasions the Company distinguished itself for State service.

Company "K" won the Federal Inspection award in 1933 and 1934. It captured the Sheldon Trophy for calibre .30 marksmanship in 1933 and 1934. The unit had the high small bore team of Arizona in 1932 and 1933.

The Company's first commander was Captain Jimmy Walker, while Captain Ernest A. Littlefield is the present commanding officer.

FACTUAL HISTORY

Company "L" was first organized and Federally recognized January 19, 1910, at Yuma with Captain Perry Spittler in command. On May 9, 1916, it mobilized for service on the Mexican Border, under Captain Frank W. Hall. After serving at various stations the regiment was ordered to Camp Kearney, California, October 6, 1917, arriving there October 18, 1917, as a component part of the 40th Division.

After an intensive period of training, Company "L" embarked for France on the S. S. Port Denison, with Captain H. L. Haupt commanding, arriving at Le Havre August 24, 1918, only to find the 40th Division had been designated as a replacement division. Statistics show, however, that the large portion of original Company "L" men sent forward into action were promoted to non-commissioned officer rank, with several becoming officers.

From December 11-26, 1918, inclusive, a detail of six officers and 251 men of the regiment, with Captain H. L. Haupt, commanding, served as the Honor Guard for President Wilson during his visit at Paris. Of this detail, Captain Haupt, Lieutenant Rose and the large portion of the men were of Company "L."

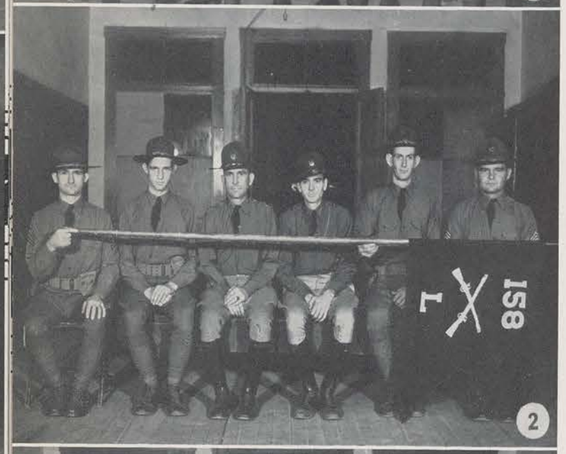

Returning to home shores April 18, 1919, the unit was mustered out of Federal service at Ft. Bliss, Texas, May 5, 1919. It was again organized and Federally recognized February 18, 1929.

Being marksmanship minded, Company "L" has won the Chief of the National Guard Bureau Company Team match three times, being high team in the Eighth Corps Area in 1938. It was designated The Chief of Infantry Combat Squad for Arizona in 1936.

It also won the Fraser Trophy in 1936 for showing the most improvement during the year.

FACTUAL HISTORY

Although Prescott was one of the first towns in Arizona to have an organized unit of the Arizona National Guard (Companies "B" and "C" of the First Territorial Rifles were organized there on September 2, 1865), there is no record of Company "M" until January 19, 1910, when it was organized as part of the First Arizona Infantry. None of the particulars of this early organization nor the functions of the unit during the World War are known.

Company "M," 158th Infantry, was Federally recognized in Prescott on February 3, 1930. The organization of the Company was completed in the summer of 1929, but it did not attend field training that year as it had not been Federally recognized.

Alfred B. Carr, World War veteran who recruited the Company to the required strength and was instrumental in securing its assignment to Prescott, served as the Company's first commanding officer until October, 1930. Captain Merrill C. Windsor succeeded Captain Carr. Under his leadership, the unit became very proficient and won the Jordan Trophy for the best Machine Gun Company in the Regiment in 1931. It has retained this trophy for five of the seven years since it came into being. Captain Harry L. Mayfield, present commander, was appointed November 16, 1932. Under his guidance, the unit captured the Breen Trophy, awarded to the most proficient Company in the 158th Infantry, when it was first presented in 1937.

For several years this organization has made its home in an old church building, the roof of which fell in a couple of winters back from the weight of the snow it carried. This condition, though, will soon be remedied when the unit moves into a new armory, which will be one of the finest in the State.

CONTINUATION OF HISTORIES

Headquarters Company, Eighty-ninth Infantry Brigade

First Lieutenant Osborne G. Johnson, who had formed the Second Battalion Headquarters Company in Chandler, was appointed Captain and assigned to command the 89th Brigade Headquarters Company upon the change of designation. He remained in command until May 18, 1934, at which time, due to the pressure of business, he relinquished the command to Lieutenant Robert H. Vest, who was promoted to Captain and is still in charge of the Company.

Boone M. Worley, who in his several years with the Company has risen from Private through the various grades to Second Lieutenant, was commissioned to the latter position on May 18, 1934.

The 1938 encampment at Fort Huachuca afforded the unit its first opportunity to function as a Brigade Headquarters Company with a full Brigade. Acquitting itself in commendable style, it took great pleasure and pride in this opportunity.

encampment at Fort Huachuca was named "Camp Earl B. Turnage" in honor of this unit's first commander.

Commissioned in 1927, First Lieutenant James Elmer Redden, M.C., joined the detachment. In 1927, Dr. Turnage died in Tucson, and Captain Frederick P. Perkins, M.C., took over the command. First Lieutenant Lester B. Stallcup, D.C., was detailed to the unit in 1927.

On June 15, 1930, Captain Perkins was promoted to the rank of Major and Regimental Surgeon, which rank and position he still holds. On July 3, 1935, Captain Alvin Kirmse, M.C., was commissioned, and on January 1, 1938, he assumed command of the detachment. In 1937, First Lieutenant Charles E. Borah and First Lieutenant Clarence E. Yount, Jr., M.C., were added to the commissioned personnel.

It has been a constant desire of the detachment to improve the type of recruits with special reference to those interested in first aid, military hygiene, practical nursing and even those who desired to eventually enter the practice of medicine. The work of this detachment is mainly concerned with medicine, surgery and dental subjects. This detachment is furnished with the very latest medical supplies and equipment.

Headquarters Company, Second Battalion, 158th Infantry

September 1, 1926, it was moved to Ray, Arizona, by exchanging designations with the 89th Brigade Headquarters Company. In Ray, the Company was commanded successively by First Lieutenant N. A. Houston and First Lieutenant Frank E. Fraser. On May 23, 1929, the Company was moved by change of designation to Tucson, the Third Battalion Headquarters Company then located in Tucson going to Ray.

First commander in Tucson was First Lieutenant Dallas O. Warne, and since his resignation, it has been commanded by a number of officers who are well-known in the regiment, such as, Captain Edwin M. Gibbs, Captain Frederick R. Stofft, Captain Henry R. Merchant, and the present commander, First Lieutenant James Pemberton.

Two years ago the Company, as well as the entire Regiment, was greatly saddened by the loss of its junior officer, Second Lieutenant Mitchell S. Vialo, who was liked and respected throughout the Regiment. Soon after the death of Lieutenant Vialo, Lieutenant Wright was appointed Communication Officer and has continued in that capacity.

Always maintaining a high standard of technical proficiency and morale, this unit believes it will always be prepared to fulfill the duties assigned to it in time of emergency.

talion Communication officer. Of the original members, Fredrick R. Stofft, now Captain and Regimental S-4, is the only one still associated with the 158th Infantry. The unit was moved to Ray, Arizona, on September 1, 1929, by exchanging designation with the Second Battalion Headquarters Company. In Ray, it was commanded successively by First Lieutenant Frank E. Fraser (now aide to the Commanding General, 45th Division) and First Lieutenant Harry W. Boggs.

By May, 1933, so many of the mines which supported the Town of Ray had closed down, that the community could no longer support a National Guard unit; therefore, on May 31, 1933, the unit was mustered out and its equipment transferred to Phoenix, where on June 5, 1933, the present organization was mustered in and accorded Federal recognition.

Second Lieutenant John H. Hanny, Headquarters Company, 158th Infantry, was promoted to First Lieutenant and commander of the new unit, bringing 13 men with him. First Sergeant Robert P. Willis, Company "K," was appointed Second Lieutenant and Communication Officer. Five men from Company "K" were transferred to make up the necessary strength for recognition. On January 1, 1935, Willis was appointed First Lieutenant and commander when Lieutenant Hanny resigned because of business pressure. Corporal Harold H. Moore was appointed Second Lieutenant and Communication Officer.

Having always maintained a very high standard of proficiency, this Company has adopted as its motto—"Get the Job Done!"
