BIOLOGISTS PLAN TAXIDERMY TALKS FOR LINE ISLANDS

Three taxidermy students from the tenth grade at the Kamehameha School for Boys will go to Wahiawa on May 15, with Mr. Donald Mitchell, biology and science instructor at the Kamehameha School for Boys, to broadcast taxidermy lessons to the former Kamehameha boys located on Howland Island, 1800 miles from Honolulu.

Most of the colonists on the various equatorial islands are former students of the Kamehameha School for Boys and they have much free time on their hands. The boys from Howland Island informed Mr. Mitchell by air that they would like to learn to mount some of the many species of birds which thickly inhabit home.

Dr. Merton Mack of Wahiawa will supply the radio for the program which will be sent to the islands. Dr. Mack is the brother-in-law of Mr. Allen Bailey, a faculty member at K. S. B.

Wai Wing Seto, the first speaker on the air, will explain to the boys on the island how the birds are caught, killed, and prepared for mounting.

Arthur Chang will follow Seto with a talk on how to skin the bird and prepare it so the skin may be preserved if not used at that time.

Thomas Ontai, the final speaker on the program, will explain to the boys how the artificial body is made and placed in the bird. He will also say a little concerning the placing of the finishing touches on the bird.

The boys who are specially interested in taxidermy are Charles Ahia, governor of Howland Island, and James Kinney also a member of the Howland island colony and a graduate of the class of 1932.

The last expedition to the Line Islands was also made to Canton and Enderbury islands south-west of Howland island. These islands are coral atolls in the Phoenix island group.

Enderbury and Canton islands were recently claimed by the United States and have been colonized by Kamehameha boys since the latter part of January, 1938. The boys who are now colonizing these two atolls are former residents of Howland island.

The governor of Enderbury Island is Joseph Anakalea; the governor of Canton Island is James Kamakaiwi, the most outstanding Kamehameha student in the line island colonization. The lagoon on Canton Island is being developed by the colonists for a government air base.

Dean Of Girls' Housemothers To Leave For Retirement On Coast

By Louise Akana

One of Kamehameha's dearest friends will be leaving the school and the islands for a much deserved retirement to the mainland when school closes. She has seen many shy, timid girls come into the school. She has helped them with their problems. She has watched them as year after year they grew into strong, sturdy characters. She has attended many graduations and observed the eagerness of these young men and women as they filed out into the world. On her bedroom tables stand pictures of girls whom she has tutored during their stay at Kamehameha. Her name is Miss Mary Stimson.

When she was first approached by the inquiring reporter she raised protesting hands saying, "There is no story." But as she started to unfold the pages of the past in her mind she remembered her arrival back in September in the year 1923.

"We were nine days coming over," she said, with a laugh, "we sailed on the old S. S. Lurline."

"When I arrived at the old school for girls, Miss Frances Lemon, then principal of the girls' school, initiated me into the duties of housemother. That very night Miss Lemon was stricken very ill and was forced to lie in bed for a week.

"The first girl that I became acquainted with was the present Mrs. Martha Hoho, who was then Martha Poepe (aunt of Jennie, Bettie and Nora Stewart) who happened to arrive at school early and who helped me get used to the surroundings before the other girls arrived."

Miss Stimson side-tracked herself there when she remembered a little dog named Prince.

"Once a stray dog wandered into the grounds," she said, pleasantly. "He was probably a pet of some home but had roamed off. The curious thing about him was that he loved the girls but he was deathly afraid of men. Prince attended devotions every morning consistently where he had a particular spot that he kapu'd for himself. With the same persistence he doggedly reported to chapel every Sabbath. There also he reserved himself a seat. He never missed either one of these gatherings until he died."

In comparing the girls' old school with the modern one Miss Stimson also has interesting views. She considered the old school very charming with its date trees and wooden buildings but she finds this "castle in the air" more beautiful.

"I really believe," she said thoughtfully, "that these buildings are so comfortable and the setting so ideal that it has made everyone happier."

Although nice programs were given down there, she believes that since there are better places to perform in, the programs up here are much finer for the pupils.

"I have enjoyed the work up here and the charm of the islands—especially the mountains, sea, trees and flowers—but after all it is the girls that have given me most pleasure. I really do expect to hear of many of the girls attaining to fine, influential positions," she sighed as a sort of plea to the youth of K. S. G.

"You know, I came here with the intention of staying one year," said Miss Stimson as an after thought, "and here I am finishing my fifteenth."

Miss Stimson has no definite plans for the future but whatever they are it is hoped that she will be "happy ever-after!"
