MISS ELEANOR WILSON

will regret the departure of the popular Miss Helen Taft. As sisters of a near age, Misses Marjorie, Jessie, and Eleanor Wilson have grown up together to find pleasure in the same amusements. Their principal enjoyment is outdoor sport.

Naturally, one sister must excel the other, if only slightly, in the various sports in which they are all highly proficient. Miss Jessie and Miss Eleanor Wilson are the two tennis enthusiasts, and can be seen daily upon the courts, when the weather permits. Which of the two is the better is hard to say, as the victory is first claimed by one and then the other, but both play a little better than their sister, Miss Marjorie, who is not so keen at this game.

Miss Marjorie is a great pedestrian, and hardly a day goes by that, rain or shine, she does not walk several miles, generally over the nearest country roads which she can find. She can outwalk either of her sisters. All three are likewise devoted to their sports. They all swim, play golf, and ride.

Devotees of sport among the elect of society will welcome the advent of the three charming daughters of Woodrow Wilson, although, at the same time, they
