

Reporting the News

SELECTIONS FROM NIEMAN REPORTS

Edited, with an Introduction,
by Louis M. Lyons

"This is a must book for anyone seriously interested in the state of American journalism and the ideas of contemporary American journalists.... This book probes sensitively into many areas of the newspaper world, raising difficult questions and attempting honest answers. What emerges is the fact that many of the best minds in American journalism are troubled by the state of their profession— or business or calling, if you will—and see candid self-examination as a beginning toward the finding of solutions."

Harry Schwartz,
The New York Times

"Lyons has been able to put between covers an impressive collection of articles on the practices and problems, the pluses and the minuses of modern journalism. ... Reporting the News will not only be of interest to anyone concerned with the communications field, but will preserve for scholars and laymen notable articles which should be preserved and readily available."

Victor O. Jones,
Nieman Reports

"A remarkable collection of half-a-hundred pieces taken from Nieman Reports, the magazine of the Nieman Fellowships for newspapermen at Harvard.... The responsibility and role of the Press are dealt with in depth by a regular galaxy of American journalists. Excellent inside sketches of newsmen at work, discussion of the main foreign beats, informed criticism of the US Establishment in some of its basic attitudes to the Press, are features of a volume as attractive in style as it is instructive in content."

London Journalist

"If, as the publishers note, most newspaper readers have only a hazy or fictionalized notion of what goes on inside the newspaper business, they will find Reporting the News a comfortable and rangy introduction to much that is basic and much that is enthralling about the craft."

Robert J. Manning,
Washington
Post-Times-Herald
Book Week

Athenum 122
$3.75

Originally published
by Harvard
University Press