

the nature of a place is. At the same time, public art should be an indicator for what our era was defined as. When we look at past civilizations we typically examine their art to understand the time.

Why do you think public art is important?

Public art is essential to complete our humanity. Public art demonstrates our study of material and ideas. This pursuit is the key to all of our development as a species. From the first rock that was used as a tool to our highly sophisticated use of electricity, there is an underlying theme of exploration and application. Imagination and creativity are based in a desire to advance our world, whether it is by making things that have never existed or articulating things in a way that demonstrates a dynamic of life.

Click here to return to the top of this document

Click here to return to the Broomfield Public Art Bench Project main page