SALTUS CLASS OF 1974

What has happened in twenty years? For now, let's remember that time long ago, when pedal cycles and mobylettes were common. That time when we shared our most impressionable years, in a place which cooked our thoughts and honed our skills. Think back. You can remember the good days: Sports Days, competition, and fun times. You can remember the Saltus days: steeped in tradition, peppered with plenty of rules and regulations.

Tradition. Those days always started with morning attention in front of the flagpole. Special days, like Founders' Day and Sports Day would end with high tea and parents discussing what it was like when they went to School. "Which house were you in?" "Darrell." "I was in Saltus, but it always seemed to be Watlington which did well in sports. What was the other house? Oh yes Butterfield."

Rules, Rules, Rules. There were plenty. No walking on the grass. No one inside during recess. Not in uniform? Sent home! Talking? Fatigue Squad! Late? Detention! When the summer heat began to grip, the ties would fly -but only after morning Assembly.

Remember the personalities. What a mixture. Some were overbearing. Stern Steveo shouted down the hallways: "Wilson, why aren't you in class!" Another acted as if he had eyes in the back of his head. Rothwell while writing on the blackboard would call out: "Law, stop leaning back on the stool!" If his 'observation' was not remedied, you would likely have a piece of chalk flying through the air at you. Collins, in his Welsh accent insisted: "Dyer, don't play with the stroboscopes!"

Other personalities were milder but equally entertaining. There was Hunter with his humorous side. Red herrings were always to be caught in his class. With Big Bird, one minute a whisper had you sent to the Headmaster; the next, some mean clay fights were fought. What about fair Miss Fairy? Ooh la la! ... Not holding the tool right in Woodwork? More often than not one got a whack from Williams' tape stick. Tongue tied in Spanish? Besford's bull whip soon got you talking...but was it Spanish? Fresh from England, Duncan was adjusting to Bermuda as students were leaving him Ban Rollon.

All these personalities were guided under the watchful, flickering eye of Haygarth. Such unique personalities added spice to life at Saltus.

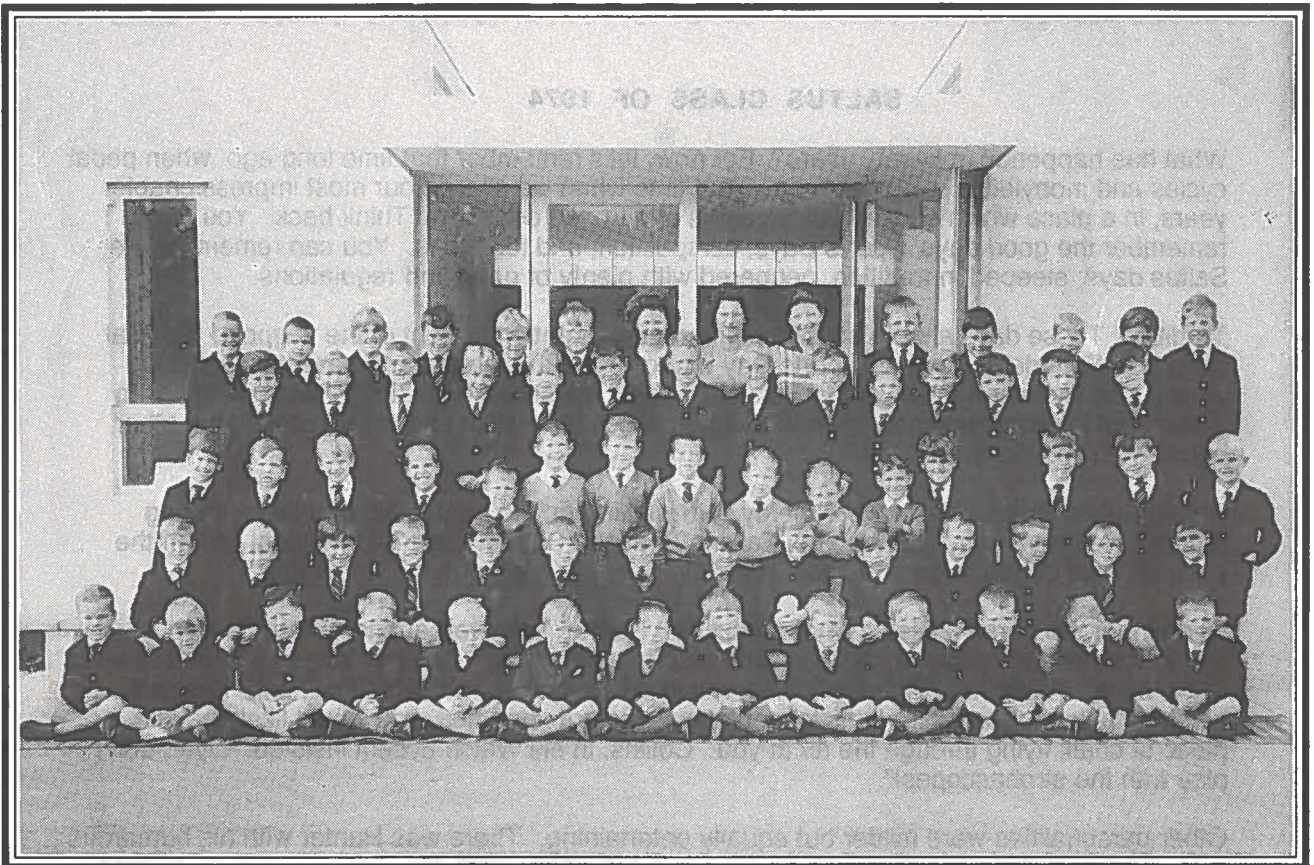

What has happened in twenty years? The next few pages documents our visible changes. Should your memories be mostly negative or mixed, you can take heart that you are only halfway through your life with plenty of time to forget the bad times. If your memories are good, you should be thankful to a school which faced major transitions and yet still provided the best with less. Our payment should be to continue to be a positive force in this ever changing world.

On behalf of the whole year group, special thanks should be given to Wicks 2 and Davidge. Without their tireless efforts, neither this book, nor our times to reminisce would have taken place.

"Heads" of Saltus

A CLIP FROM THE PAST

ALL THE KING'S MEN?

One of the largest stage productions ever to be presented by Saltus, took place last April. A large cast of over 40 actors and actresses took part in the play, which ran for three nights — April 4th, 5th and 6th. The performers came from both Saltus and the Bermuda High School. They were accompanied by the thirteen-piece Saltus School Band and the Saltus Choir.

The play, which tells the story of the defeat of the armies of King Charles outside of Gloucester in 1643, is a tragedy, according to Mr. Mal Evans of the ticket office. It is the sad tale of how a cunning plan of Colonel Massey thwarts the Royalist plans, and the King and his troops march away from the victorious city of Gloucester.

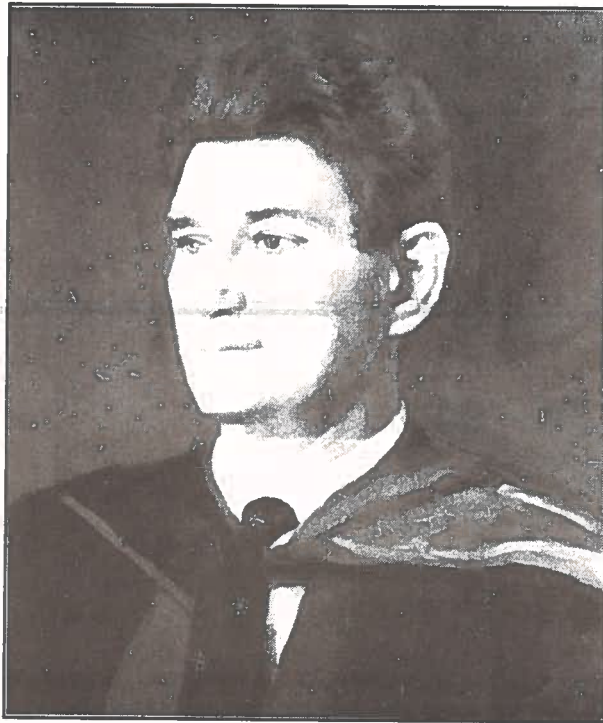

Rehearsals began way back in January, shortly after the Christmas vacation, and continued, somewhat sparsely attended at first, for the next four months. Finally, both the producer, Miss Karen Shell, and the musical director, Mr. William Duncan, agreed that the show was ready for the road. Meanwhile, set construction was continuing and soon a magnificent castle of beer cartons, most generously supplied by the teachers at extremely short notice, stretched across the stage. Mr.

Patrick Skelton, of the Art Department, using the fullest extent of his natural skill, built a wooden bridge that would fall apart on demand.

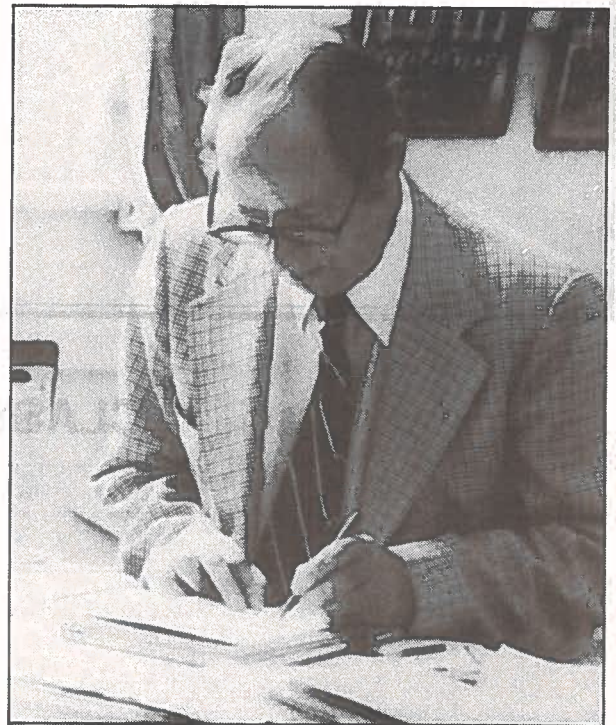

The play went off with only minor hitches, and the catastrophes on stage were not noticed by a sleepy audience. Fortunately, relatively few tomatoes were thrown.

After the third and final performance, Mr. Duncan held a large party at his apartment. Though all of the students and actors were excluded from the guest list, reliable sources inform us that the wild and rowdy party did not break up until the wee hours of the morning. It looks as if we will be able to afford a much larger castle next time!
