ON the historic Post Road from New York to Albany, from the days when stage coaches rumbled along until now when cars roll smoothly and swiftly over a modern motor highway—the Red Hook Hotel has ever offered tourists in the Hudson Valley a pleasant stay for overnight or journey's end.

Back in the days of the Dutch settlers, a red griste mill stood on the bend in the Post Road, the present site of Upper Red Hook. The people called their settlement Roa Hoecke, meaning "red bend" in Dutch, and in 1812 the town was founded under the English name of Red Hook.

Red Hook is situated in the heart of the Valley's apple industry, where Maytime turns the landscape into a vista of blossoming trees, and autumn shows ruddy fruit gleaming through the foliage, soon to be packed for shipment to many destinations where the superior qualities of Hudson Valley fruit are welcomed.

Red Hook has many advantages for summer or year-round residence—well-shaded, well-kept streets, an up-to-date village water supply, a modern high school, churches of all the principal denominations, dependable electric service at attractive rates, a fine golf course and healthful surroundings.
