

Justice Must Be for All

To the Editor: Take a look at this society and our communities, then ask ourselves, who is responsible for the moral and spiritual development of the poeple, particularly youth and especially black?

Two recent murders in our town, both women, one black the other white, all products of a morally sick and apathetic society. In the case of Mrs. Crawford, a diligent effort by the law enforcement agents resulted in the arrest of a prime suspect; but in the case of Miss Robins, no such effort was initiated to apprehend her executioners. Was not Miss Robbins a human being? Was she not also due a day of justice under the law? Justice for one and not for the other is simply no justice at all.

During my stay or sojourn in this city, I have kept track of numbers of black murdered under questionable circumstances with no justice. The total is six.

Where are the preachers? Where are the churches? Where are the civic leaders and renowned responsible citizens? I hear no voices of protest, no voices of concern. Why are you silent? You in the pulpits and in the churches, the war is in the streets, the sheep have gone astray. Get out there and find them and cry out for justice.
