Dear Little Sweetheart-

Your letter just came and I have about fifteen minutes this morning to write to you. There is no news to tell, but that I'm anxious to come home to you Thursday, dear. It'll be just "me and you" then and will be as such as long as I can stay. Don't know yet what will do, but I guess we can find enough to occupy the time.

We're all up in John's room again and they want me to go up on the roof with them to take some pictures. - Write all you now, and when the prints are done, I'll get some.

Our squad was on duty as Barrocho police this morning but I didn't do any more this time than last time. It's a pretty soft job taken all around.

The guys just asked me what you looked like whether or not you were smaller or bigger than me. I said bigger, and then said, "Never marry
a girl that is taller or huskier than yourself,
for family reasons." How's that for advice?
But I fooled them, didn't I?

Time is up here and I haven't said a thing. But when I get home we'll have all day to talk. Until then behave, dear.

Yours
Joe.
